Pearl Harbor Data in U. S. Two Weeks Before Attack

Delays in Decoding Prevented Its Use, Gen. Miles Testifies Before Probe Group

By Mary Spargo
Post Staff Writer.

Information that the Japanese were considering attacking Pearl Harbor was in United States' hands during the two weeks before December 7, 1941, but Army-Navy decoding delays prevented its use, the Army disclosed yesterday.

Maj. Gen. Sherman Miles, chief of Army Intelligence at the time of Pearl Harbor, yesterday told the Joint Congressional Committee investigating the attack that lack of trained manpower and facilities caused the tragic failure.

Under questioning, Miles admitted that a message sent from Tokyo to Honolulu September 24, 1941, and decoded on October 9 showed in "hindsight" that the Japanese were making a bombing "plat" (or sectional map) of Pearl Harbor.

No Special Significance

No special significance was attached to this message at the time, he said, since the huge collection of Japanese secret messages available to the Army, Navy, State Department and the White House had already demonstrated that the Japanese were following the movements of every American ship.

Pressed by Gerhard Gesell, assistant committee counsel, Miles acknowledged that there had been no other message similar to this one mapping any harbor for United States vessels.

The message in question told Jap agents in Honolulu to make their reports concerning vessels in Pearl Harbor on the basis of a map "roughly dividing the waters of the harbor into five separate areas."

It was important, this message directed, to report on warships and aircraft carriers tied up at wharves, buoys and in docks at Pearl Harbor and to mention when there were two or more vessels tied up alongside the same wharf.

Took No Action

Questioned on what steps he had taken to secure more adequate personnel and facilities to speed decoding of the increasing volume of secret Japanese messages in the last months of 1941, the tall, bespectacled Army officer said he had discussed the matter but taken no action.

Miles, who was replaced as assistant chief of staff for G-2 (Intelligence) on the January 30 following Pearl Harbor, said that he had never consulted the Chief of Staff, Gen. George C. Marshall, about the need for greater haste. Miles is now stationed in Boston.

Maj. Gen. Walter C. Short, who commanded the Hawaiian Department of the Army at the time of Pearl Harbor, did not receive the Japanese messages which the Army and Navy were intercepting, Miles said.

He explained that it was so necessary to keep secret the fact that the United States had broken the Japanese secret codes that even overseas commanders were not informed.

In some instances, he said, the substance of a few intercepts were

12 Feared Lost In Ship Collision

Norfolk, Va., Nov. 29 .—Twelve crew members of a Navy seaplane salvage derrick which was sunk last night in collison with the tanker SS McClelland Creek in the waters around Thimble Shoals are feared lost, Coast Guard headquarters here reported today.

The Navy vessel went down almost immediately after the collision last night.

The Coast Guard said all available rescue vessels and planes are continuing to search the area today for survivors. No bodies have been recovered, the Coast Guard reported.

There were no casualties aboard the tanker.

Round-up of Baby News

WHAT, AGAIN!—Mrs. John B. Wren of Milwaukee, Wis., mother of twin boys born December 14, 1944, greets a second pair, this time girls, born this week

MIXUPS—While returning home on a train, Sailor Dan Caffrey of Omaha says that the 11-month-old girl (above, right) was given him by her mother. But the mother, Mrs. Dorothy Johnson of Utica, N. Y., says it was a loan and now she wants the baby back. Mrs. Alta Jacobs (below, right) is shown with the baby she brought home from the hospital at Muskogee, Okla. She alleges in a $100,000 suit that attendants told her she gave birth to a boy and 10 days later presented her with a girl

Pressure on Iran, Iceland for U. S. Airbases Denied

A State Department spokesman yesterday denied reports published in Moscow that the United States was applying "pressure" on Iran and Iceland for rights to airbases in those countries.

The official said the reports carried by the Soviet news agency, Tass, which quoted newspapers in Copenhagen and Iran were entirely inaccurate.

He said the United States had a treaty with Iceland regarding air bases in Iceland but the subject of postwar use had not been broached. With regard to Iran, the spokesman referred to Secretary of State Byrnes' recent announcement that United States troops would withdraw from Iran by the first of the year as evidence that no pressure was being applied on that country.

Eyes of Sightless To Be Used to Aid Others to See

Greenport, N. Y., Nov. 29, (U.P.)—The eyes of a baby girl who was sightless from birth until death were in a New York eye bank today ready to restore vision to six blind persons.

The Rev. and Mrs. David L. Hamm knew their 21-months'-old daughter, Judith Anne, would not live. Although she had never been able to see, the corneas of her eyes were in perfect condition and they decided to donate her eyes for the aid of others who were sightless.

Dr. Hallock Luce, the family physician, said sight could be restored to as many as six eyes, because each of the child's corneas will be divided into three parts, to be used separately.

Wilson Says Union Must Modify Stand; Company Will Send Aide Here Tuesday

BULLETIN

Detroit, Nov. 29 (U.P.).—General Motors officials tonight revealed they will resume partial negotiations with the CIO automobile workers tomorrow and meet next week with Federal conciliators in an attempt to end the nine-day-old strike in their automobile plants.

Harry W. Anderson, vice president of the Nation's No. 1 industrial empire, notified Edgar L. Warren, director of the Labor Department Conciliation Service, that he and other General Motors executives would meet with Warren at 10 a .m. next Tuesday at Washington.

New collective bargaining negotiations will get under way tomorrow morning when union and company representatives confer on picketing practices in the first mutual conference since the strike was called a week ago Wednesday.

Detroit, Nov. 29 (AP).—General Motors is willing to discuss with Government officials either here or in Washington the strike which has idled 225,000 persons, its president said today, but declines to meet with leaders of the striking CIO union under present conditions.

C. E. Wilson, G. M. president, in his first press conference since start of the nine-day-old strike, said the union must halt "illegal picketing" and modify what he called its "30 per cent or else" wage demands before the corporation will resume wage negotiations.

He outlined the General Motors position a few hours after President Truman in Washington had expressed approval of a recommen-

5700 Homes Planned Here In Three Years

Low-Rent Units To Meet 'Only Most Urgent Needs'

The National Capital Housing Authority yesterday estimated that Washington's housing needs for the next three years will require the building of 5700 low-rent homes, costing $36,738,500.

The District's needs, along with those of 334 other communities, were submitted to the Senate Banking and Currency Committee hearing on the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill, authorizing a 22 million dollar increase in annual Federal Housing Administration contributions to cities.

Of the 5700 units, 1000 would provide homes for the lowest income families now living in the District's 3819 temporary war housing units.

Many Must Go Soon

According to John T. Ihlder, executive officer of NCHA, Congress has ordered the removal of these 3819 houses within two years—"and a considerable number of them must be removed within one year."

The other 4700 homes would be built for those families "who are most acutely in need of homes and who are now living in dwelling classified as unfit."

The remaining 2819 temporary war units will be replaced by private contractors, Ihlder added.

40,000 Declared Unfit

"However," Ihlder pointed out, "these 5700 homes will take care of only the most urgent needs. Of Washington's 200,000 dwellings, at least 40,000 are so bad that they should either be torn down or completely renovated."

Present NCHA plans call for initial financing of the construction project by FHA funds, but later most of the money will come from sale of NCHA securities to private and institutional investors, the NCHA head stated.

No Snow Today—But It'll Be Chilly

There's going to be tough sledding today—no snow.

This the weatherman promised yesterday as suburban areas reported snow flurries while downtown Washington shivered under a cold rain mixed with wet snow. No snow is in prospect today, the weatherman said, predicting mostly cloudy and moderately cold—with lowest temperatures near freezing.

North of Washington winter struck a severe blow with heavy snowfalls in New York and New England and a 70-mile gale which lashed the New England coast.

'Bloodshed' Threat Sent Iran by Reds

Government Told Troop Movements Will Necessitate Reinforcements

London, Nov. 29 (AP).—A spokesman of the Iranian Embassy declared today Russia had threatened to reinforce Red army garrisons in northern Iran if fresh Iranian troops moved up into that troubled area, where insurgent activities now are reported to have spread to a third province.

In Washington, Iranian Ambassador Hussein Ala quoted a Russian note to Iran as saying that bloodshed would result if more Iranian forces moved northward, and that this would necessitate Russia's sending more Soviet forces into Iran. Russia occupies the northern part of the country under a wartime agreement with Britain and Iran.

Both Ala and the spokesman here said Russia had rejected Iran's request to send reinforcements northward after disorders, blamed by the Iranian government on "Separatists," broke out last week in Azerbaijan, the northwest province of Iran bordering Russia.

Sources close to the British Foreign Office said they did not understand the Russian message to Iran as constituting a "threat," nor an outright denial of Iranian authority under the sovereignty guarantee by Russia, Britain and the United States.

Dispatches from Tehran, meanwhile, said civil disturbances had spread to a third northwestern province, as a force of insurgents pushed toward Resht, 15 miles from the Caspian Sea, in Gilan Province.

Woman, 86, Dies, 2 Others Injured In Night Blaze

A 86-year-old woman was suffocated and two others were injured when they jumped from a second-story window in a two-alarm fire at 2215 1st st. nw. last night.

Ten other persons were driven to the rain-soaked street by smoke from an adjoining house at 2217.

The dead woman was Mrs. Ella Metzler, who was carried from the first floor by firemen. She was given first aid at the scene and removed to Casualty Hospital where she was pronounced dead.

The injured were listed as Millicent Mullary and Margaret Gleason. They, too, were taken to Casualty.

The fire apparently started in the basement at 2215 1st st. nw. and spread to the floors above. Origin of the blaze was not immediately determined.

Stambaugh Named To a Directorship Of Import Bank

President Truman yesterday appointed Lynn U. Stambaugh of North Dakota to one of the Republican vacancies as a director of the Export-Import Bank.

Stambaugh is a former national commander of the American Legion.

He also announced the reappointment of two other Republicans for additional terms on the Interstate Commerce Commission—William E. Lee of Idaho and William J. Patterson of North Dakota.

He told reporters at a news conference one Republican vacancy still exists on the Export-Import Bank. He said the bank is one of the most important organizations the Nation has for the welfare of the country and the world.

Asked whether the Stambaugh appointment meant that Leo Crowley, who recently resigned as chairman of the bank, is not coming back to its board, the President replied in the affirmative.

Jack Nichols, 49, vice president of Transcontinental & Western Airlines and former Congressman, killed in a plane crash over Africa November 7, left an estate of $99,593, according to a probate petition in District Court yesterday.

The will directed that a trust fund be set up by the Riggs National Bank with an income of $200 a month for his divorced wife, Mrs. Marion E. Nichols of Eufaula, Okla. Any excess from the income is to be given his two children, Dan, 9, who lives with Mrs. Nichols, and Mrs. Nina Jean Sellers of Norman, Okla.

The estate consisted entirely of personal property, of which $75,000 was in stocks and bonds, $8000 in jewelry and household effects, $13,093 in cash and $3500 in unpaid loans.

Any More Talks With Attlee And Stalin Vetoed by Truman

By John M. Hightower
Associated Press Staff Writer

President Truman yesterday vetoed talk of any more meetings with Generalissimo Stalin and Prime Minister Attlee. He said he is looking to the United Nations to solve problems heretofore reserved for the Big Three.

At the same time, the President expressed confidence in Russian cooperation for world peace and said he does not share fears that lack of cooperation by Russia would lead to war.

In a busy few minutes at his news conference the President also:

1. Revealed that negotiations are under way for revision of Allied control machinery in Germany, particularly for a change in the requirement that no action affecting all four occupation zones can be taken until the United States, Britain, France and Russia are unanimously agreed.

2. Said that Gen. George C. Marshall will leave for China in three or four days as special envoy following up Maj. Gen. Patrick J. Hurley, resigned Ambassador. Marshall will be under instructions to carry out established American policy in China and his instructions will be published.

3. Promised full discussion at a later date of the whole question of reconverting international affairs from war to peace.

4. Expressed conviction that most other nations are as wholeheartedly in favor of the United Nations as is the United States.

The President's foreign affairs discussion began incidental to his prepared report on the progress of reconversion of the American economy to peacetime activities. This described the first 100 days of reconversion within the country.

After it was finished Bert Andrews of the New York Herald Tribune asked the President whether he could say anything about the first 100 days of reconversion on the international front—days characterized by such incidents as the explosive resignation earlier this week of Ambassador Hurley, the congressional blast at UNRRA, scattered evidences of weakening cooperation among the Allied powers and particularly by two fears.

The reporter said these fears are first, that Russia will not cooperate in world peace efforts and second, that noncooperation by Russia will lead to war.

Mr. Truman, standing behind his big shiny desk, began answering the question before it was completed. He said that he does not share either of those fears and that he will discuss the situation fully at a later date when the turmoil gets hot enough. Someone suggested that it seems pretty hot right now and, amid laughter, the President said well, let it settle down a little bit.

The talk shifted to the report Mr. Truman released Wednesday from Byron Price, his special ob-

Hits State Dept. Secrecy

Hurley Praises White House Plan to Restate China Policy

By International News Service

President Truman's announcement yesterday that he will issue shortly a public statement on United States policy toward China was hailed by former Ambassador Patrick J. Hurley as an "immeasurable help."

Meanwhile, a subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee headed by Senator Tom Connally (D., Tex.) conferred with Secretary of State Byrnes on Hurley's bristling charges of duplicity within the State Department.

As demands crackled in Congress for an investigation into Hurley's charges that State Department career men sought to sabotage his mission in China, the President told his news conference that the policy statement will be given in the form of published instructions to Hurley's successor, Gen. George C. Marshall.

"It is incumbent upon the President or Secretary of State Byrnes to make such a pronouncement at the earliest possible moment," Hurley told International News Service.

"It will help the President and Secretary Byrnes immeasurably. I suffered from the lack of such a statement," Hurley said, continuing:

"I knew what the policy was, I had it in letters and messages from the State Department and the White House, but I found that, since there wasn't any official statement on policy, others could go around saying 'Oh, no, that isn't the policy of the United States.'"

Hurley reiterated his view that too much secrecy cloaks the State Department's handling of public information and he condemned that secrecy as dangerous to American foreign relations and prestige abroad.

"This," he said, "is a matter which I regret has been largely overlooked among the charges I have made against the State Department."

Mr. Truman said that there had been no recent change in America's policy toward China. He declined to restate it yesterday and went on to say that he would do so publicly soon.

Secretary of State Byrnes has stated that this country's policy in China is to help complete the surrender of Japanese forces there and to see that they are returned to Japan.

It is also the policy of the United States, he explained, to help unify China and aid it to better times in peace.

In the meantime an investigation by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee of Hurley's explosive charges against State Department career men was assured.

Chairman Connally of the Foreign Relations Committee, was preparing to call Hurley and Secretary Byrnes before the committee Monday to testify secretly in connection with Hurley's charges that U. S. foreign service officers sought to sabotage American policies in China.

Hurley expressed his willingness to appear before "any congressional committee or any Government official at any time."

Leader in Creating Bomb

U. S. Must Lead in World Rule Of Atomic Energy, Dr. Urey Says

By Marshall Andrews
Post Staff Writer

The United States must lead the way in bringing atomic energy under international control even at the sacrifice of some of its national sovereignty, Dr. Hardld Urey yesterday told the Senate Atomic Energy Committee.

The alternative, he warned, is "dire disaster."

Dr. Urey, professor of chemistry at the University of Chicago, 1931 Nobel Prize winner for his discovery of heavy water and key scientist in the development of the atomic bomb, said concealment of apparatus to produce atomic energy is impossible if competent inspectors are employed. Such inspectors, he said, should be empowered to "ask any questions and receive answers to them, visit any scientist or engineer and see his work, inspect any facility or plant that they desired."

In this view he was in accord with Maj. Gen. L. R. Groves, chief of the Army's atomic bomb project, who previously had said that inspection would be effective only under those conditions.

Preceding Urey on the witness stand yesterday, Groves told the committee that "one other country in which many people are interested" could "catch up" with the United States in the technological and industrial processes of atomic bomb manufacture "in 15 to 20 years." This could be done by that country, he explained, if it worked "in great secrecy" without help from the United States and approached the problem "with the vigor with which the United States approached it."

It was evident the witness referred to Russia.

If the United States furnished that country with its technological and industrial data, Groves said, it probably could develop a bomb in "five to seven years." He added, however, that if the United States continued experimentation and production of atomic bombs it could "keep ahead of any nation in the world for all time to come" provided "the rules were the same." That, he explained, meant "if we have secrecy and they have secrecy." He said that if the United States makes its information public and the other nation worked in secrecy it "eventually would get ahead."

Senator Connally (D., Tex.), chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and a member of the Atomic Energy Committee, objected to "taking up each country and particularizing" its possible contribution to atomic

Taft Curbs On Delegate Authority Defeated

Only Wheeler Votes With Republicans; Passage, Virtually Unchanged, Seen

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

The Administration's United Nations bill, spelling out United States delegate powers in the new world league, yesterday weathered its first Senate test by the overwhelming majority of 41 to 18.

The test came on placing a legislative restriction on the authority of our representative on the Security Council—requiring him to cast his vote to "bring about a result in accord with international justice as well as international peace and security."

Sponsored by Taft

The defeated amendment was sponsored by Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio), who contended UNO force might be used to "erase" Poland, Finland or other small nations if keeping the peace was the Council's sole standard.

Only one Democrat, Senator Burton K. Wheeler (D., Mont.), joined 17 Republicans in support of the amendment. Six Republicans joined 35 Democrats to defeat it after Senate Foreign Relations Chairman Tom Connally (D., Tex.), and Senator Warren R. Austin (R., Vt.), argued that this and other restrictions suggested by Taft "would destroy the primary purpose and power of the Council."

As the bill moved out of debate and into the voting stage, leaders predicted all major changes in the implementing statute will be defeated and the bill will be passed substantially unchanged.

Interest Seen Waning

Galleries, overflowing during the Charter debate four months ago, were only partly filled and during most of the debate fewer than a dozen Senators sat at their desks. Senators complained privately of a "lack of public interest" in the most important step by this Nation since the Charter was ratified.

Advocates of more restrictions may register their peak vote on an amendment by Senator Forrest C. Donnell (R., Mo.), requiring Senate ratification of the forthcoming agreement with the Security Council on military quotas to be used to keep the peace.

To Submit Agreement

President Truman, after negotiating the agreement, plans to submit it to Congress in the form of a joint resolution, requiring majority vote approval of both Houses.

Donnell told the Senate the agreement should be considered instead as a treaty, requiring a two thirds Senate ratifying vote.

Awaiting a vote were a series of amendments by Senator Eugene D. Milliken (R., Colo.). One of these would require Senate confirmation of the United States representatives on the General Assembly. The bill now provides only for Senate confirmation of the representatives on the Council. Some Senators complained that the Assembly has been "down-graded" by the bill.

Whittles Down "Rules"

Senator Taft first proposed four "rules" to guide the representative on the Council, but whittled these down to the one defeated yesterday, requiring our delegate to weigh "international" justice before casting his vote for economic or military sanctions.

Taft cited as hypothetical cases "an Indonesian Republic" becoming involved in war with Great Britain, and the Russians becoming involved in a "border dispute" with the Finns. Since Britain and Russia both have a veto on the Council, he argued action to keep the peace would be taken against the Indonesians and the Finns. His amendment would have required our delegate to weigh the "justice" of sanctions against such disputants.

Must Be Free to Act

Austin said that after a controversy gets beyond a dispute, and threatens world peace, the Council must be free to act immediately against whatever parties break the peace.

Nazis on Trial See Horror Camp Film

Reactions in Court Range From Tears To Indifference

Nuernberg, Nov. 29 (AP).—Twenty Nazi overlords viewed films of the horrors of German concentration camps with reactions ranging from tears to curt indifference at the Nuernberg war crimes trial today.

Fat Hermann Goering, mirthful earlier in the day, sat soberly. Field Marshal Wilhelm Keitel wiped his mouth with a white handkerchief, and stalked quickly from the courtroom.

The one-hour showing of the shocking pictures of starved, beaten and dead victims of Nazi persecutions followed the reading into the court record of Goering's threats and exultations in the Nazi seizure of Austria in 1938.

Funk Breaks Into Tears

Walther Funk, former minister of economics, brushed tears from the fleshy pockets under his eyes as he watched the films.

Unnerved by the show, the former governor general of Poland Hans Frank, sat huddled in his seat without lifting his head for 10 minutes.

Rudolf Hess, the former No. 2 deputy fuehrer, appearing more alert to his surroundings than on any occasion since the start of the trial, wiped his sweating palms.

Hjalmar Horace Greeley Schacht, his pinch-penny mouth drawn to a narrow line, refused to look at any of the scenes. Franz von Papen also refused to look.

Instruments of Terror

Thomas J. Dodd, American assistant prosecutor, prefaced the film exhibition with these words to the international military tribunal:

"We intend to prove each and every one of these defendants knew of the existence of these concentration camps and used them as instruments of terror to enforce their controls on the German people, and to obliterate freedom in Germany and the invaded countries."

Not only Goering but others of the defendants grinned and laughed as Assistant United States Prosecutor Sidney Alderman revealed the threats, bluffs and deceit with which Hitler softened up Austria for his invasion.

The transcripts were introduced as evidence that Goering was successful in having Arthur Seyss-Inquart, also now on trial, installed as Austria's chancellor, and that Goering dictated the telegram in which German troops were invited by Seyss-Inquart into Austria.

Bullitt's Remarks Recalled

Also introduced in evidence in connection with the plot against Austria were portions of reports given the U. S. State Department by Ambassador William C. Bullitt of conversations with Goering.

They disclosed that Goering was told in unmistakable terms by Bullitt why the United States disliked Nazism.

Bullitt told Goering that the United States deplored the destruction of democracy in Germany and the attacks upon the Jews, and the Catholic and Protestant churches. Goering was informed also that the United States resented formation of Nazi organizations inside her borders.

At first Goering maintained that only Americans joined such organizations and that the German government forbade participation in such groups by German citizens. Later Goering admitted that the groups were formed to oppose entry of United States into any possible European war.

On Pearl Harbor

Ousted Priest Promises Sensation

Birmingham, Ala., Nov. 29 (INS).—The Rev. Arthur W. Terminiello, who protested his suspension from the priesthood as the result of what he termed a "smear campaign," admitted tonight that he was under investigation by the FBI.

The priest, who was suspended as pastor of the Sacred Heart Church in Anniston, Ala., by order of the Rev. Bishop T. J. Toolen of the Roman Catholic Diocese at Mobile, Ala., for "having refused to obey the orders of his bishop to cease sending out literature which we feel is detrimental to the church and the unity of our country."

Father Terminiello said he planned to go to Washington soon to testify before the Pearl Harbor Investigating Committee.

His announcement followed publication of a letter by the Anniston Star in which the priest told members of the Union of Christian Crusaders, of which he was secretary, that he would "astound the whole United States and throw a new light on the Pearl Harbor investigation."

Father Terminiello said the campaign which resulted in his suspension was directed by "leftist groups."

dation by the advisory board of the War Mobilization and Reconversion Office that G. M. officials and union representatives sit down and talk ove rthe wage dispute that has closed more than 70 plants.

Walter P. Reuther, CIO United Automobile Workers vice president, indicated at Washington today the union may carry its case to the White House if current efforts of the Labor Department for a resumption of wage negotiations are unsuccessful.

Heads of the union have expressed readiness to meet with the management "any time, any place."

Would Send Official

Wilson said that in response to a telephone call today from Edgar L. Warren, director of the U. S. Conciliation Service, "I suggested that if they were anxious for a meeting the first of next week that we could send Harry Anderson (vice president in charge of personnel) to Washington."

He also suggested that Warren come to Detroit, Wilson said, expressing belief the picketing problem could be handled better here, "particularly since the union says this question is up to the locals."

Wilson said pickets "have shoved people around" and have kept supervisory, maintenance and office employes out of the plants.

Concerning the expressed willingness of UAW-CIO to revise its demand for a 30 per cent wage increase if the corporation's books show inability to pay it without a price increase, Wilson said:

"That's outside of collective bargaining. They want to know what our planning is. We don't think assumed ability to pay has anything to do with wages."

Ontario Ford Strike Goes On

Windsor, Ont., Nov. 29 (U.P.).—Striking CIO-United Auto Workers in a mass vote today rejected the advice of their policy committee and turned down by a slight margin a Dominion proposal to settle the 79-day strike against Ford of Canada.

Steel Strike Looms

Pittsburgh, Nov. 29 (AP).—With nearly complete returns from the steel workers' strike ballot showing a heavy majority in favor of a walkout, the CIO-United Steel Workers today issued a call for its wage policy committee to meet here December 10 to consider the action of its members.

The union is demanding a $2 a day increase in wages.

Unofficial returns to the National Labor Relations Board from hundreds of polling places in 27 States showed a nearly 5-to-1 vote favoring a strike. The vote this afternoon stood: For a strike 391,457; against 80,930.

Arlington P-TAs Meet Next Weeks

Two Arlington County parent-teacher associations have scheduled meetings for the first week in December, it was announced yesterday.

The Woodrow Wilson PTA will meet at 8 p. m. Monday in the school auditorium to hear Dr. Ruth Little, George Washington University lecturer, speak on remedial work with children. The Mathew F. Maury PTA will meet on Tuesday at 8 o'clock at the school to hear the Rev. Francis McPeake, of the D. C. Federation of Churches.

Alexandrian Sues Dairy for $1000

The Chestnut Farms-Chevy Chase Dairy Corp. was sued for $1000 damages in Alexandria Civil and Police Court yesterday by an Alexandria man who charged that a dead mouse was found in a carton of the dairy's milk.

British Win Full Control Of Soerabaja

Batavia, Java, Nov. 29 (AP).—Indian forces have completely occupied Soerabaja after a bloody 19-day battle in the great naval base, and a local administration is operating under British control, the British command announced today.

Action continued south of Soerabaja, and new fighting broke out in Batavia. In Bandoeng, 75 miles southeast of Batavia, where a British ultimatum had ordered all Indonesians out of the northern half of the city by noon today, the situation remained tense.

An official British statement said the British had used Japanese troops and tanks in "defensive" action against the Indonesians in a factory area north of Bandoeng.

In the Bandoeng action a mixed force of Gurkha riflemen, Japanese tanks and armored fighting vehicles attacked a factory, and the British admitted that it was a question of interpretation of the word "defensive."

The British said they were no longer in contact with Soetardjo, "Governor" of West Java, who had asked for a truce.

An earlier British communique said Soetardjo had been trying very hard to cooperate, but that his efforts were proving ineffectual because he lacked control over the more violent elements in the Indonesian ranks.

The Dutch news agency Aneta quoted an Australian headquarters officer in Batavia as saying that more than 83,000 Japanese have been rounded up and disarmed in the eastern parts of the Netherlands East Indies.

Accord Is Foreseen

Batavia, Nov. 29 (INS)—Premier Sjahrir of the Indonesian Nationalist "Republic" today forecast a possible accord with the Netherlands government, giving Java a status similar to that of Eire in relationship to Britain.

bomb production when Groves named several countries.

Answering a question by Senator Tydings (D., Md.), Groves had said that probably only the United States, Great Britain, Switzerland and Sweden could help another nation speed up atomic bomb production. France and Belgium possibly could help, he added, and said he "believed they would if they were paid for their assistance." Germany, Groves said, could furnish "scientists and technicians."

More Pessimistic Than Groves

Dr. Urey approached the possibility of successful atomic bomb production by other nations more pessimistically than did General Groves. He gave as his "guess" a maximum of 5 to 10 years for another industrial country to develop a successful bomb, and further curtailed his estimate by saying "he did not think it would take longer than 5 years."

Urey declared he "would not trust the word of any foreign power if it stated that it would not make atomic bombs." Furthermore, he said, he "most emphatically would not trust any foreign power to trust this country. I believe that we would live up to our agreement but I would not expect others to believe it."

The scientist viewed an atomic war of the future as starting with one nation launching a shower of atomic bombs if its launching sites second replying with its own atomic bobms if its launching sites were not destroyed. Then, he said, "the war would languish because both sides would be so busy taking care of their own homeless that they would not be able to fight."

As long as the United States continues to make and store bombs, Urey said, this country is "a threat to other countries and is guilty of beginning an armament race." As the only possible solution he urged:

"I believe that we should attempt to establish a control over atomic energy unde rthe United Nations Organization which would be so effective that no person or group of persons in any nation could manufacture atomic bombs without detection and without being brought to trial and punishment.

"This means a sacrifice of some of the national sovereignty of this and other countries. I would rathe rsubmit to this, with police officers armed with sidearms able to arrest me for violating a law not to make atomic bombs, than to be threatened along with an entire city with destruction by atomic bombs from UNO planes for a similar violation. Also I believe either of these would be better than an atomic bomb war."

Dismantling Suggested

As a first step, Urey recommended, the United States should dismantle the bombs it now has in storage by taking out the fissionable material. Asked by Senator Byrd (D., Va.) if the material could be put back into bombs, Urey said it could be, "in about six months." Byrd then suggested that other nations would assert their right to have as much of the material on hand as this country had, in which case the world would always be no more than six months away from atomic war.

"Then dump it all in the Mississippi River," said Urey. "It would be better to destroy it than permit it to start an armament race."

Envisioning a "Pearl Harbor 15 years or so from now," Senator Tydings said if it would be possible for an aggressor nation to rent several garages in Washington, establish a truck line to Baltimore and then haul a "few dozen" atomic bombs into the garages and set them off together. He suggested that the bombs could be smuggled in through nearby seaports.

2 or 3 Bombs Enough

"I would say it would be quite possible," Urey replied. "But it would be wasteful. Two or three bombs would be enough and they could be brought in piecemeal, assembled here and set off with an alarm clock."

For domestic control of atomic energy, Urey recommended two alternatives:

1. A director of atomic energy, appointed by the President with an advisory and appeal board to review his decisions.

2. A fulltime commission with the Secretaries of War, Navy, State, Commerce and Interior as ex officio members, the fulltime members to be scientists or engineers appointed by the President.

Could Bombs Destroy Earth, Russell Asks

Could the explosion of atomic bombs set off a chemical chain reaction which would destroy the earth?

Senator Russell (D., Ga.) wanted to know yesterday and asked Maj. Gen. L. R. Groves, while the Army's atomic bomb expert was appearing before the Senate Atomic Energy Committee.

General Groves replied he wasn't worried about the possibility and neither were his best advisers.

"If it happens," he remarked, "it will be all over—and we won't have to explain that one."

"Probability of Surprise"

The "magic" (code word for Japang) messages received in the two weeks before Pearl Harbor "would have indicated the strong probability of a surprise attack on Pearl Harbor" had they been read in time, Miles acknowledged under a steady rain of questions.

Among the unread messages received but not decoded before Pearl Harbor:

1. From Tokyo to Honolulu sent November 28 and decoded December 12, 1941, asking for entrance and departure from the harbor of capital ships, the length of time they were at anchor from time of entry to departure.

2. From Honolulu to Tokyo sent November 28, decoded December 12, ". . . 12,000 men (mostly marines) are expected to reinforce the troops in Honolulu during December or Janunary. There has usually been one cruiser in the waters (about 15,000 feet) south of Pearl Harbor and one or two destroyers at the entrance to the harbor."

Ship Departures, Arrivals

3. From Honolulu to Tokyo, December 1, decoded December 10, reported that usual schedule of departure and return of battleships was leaving on Tuesday and returning on Friday, or leaving on Friday and returning Saturday of the following week.

The message also reported that the battleships usually went southeast by south on maneuvers, never westward or northward.

4. From Tokyo to Japs in Honolulu, December 2, decoded December 30:

"In view of the present situation, the presence in port of warships, airplane carriers, and cruisers is of utmost importance. Hereafter to the utmost of your ability, let me know day by day."

Tokyo also wanted to know if the United States had sent up observation balloons and whether warships were provided with antimine nets.

5. From Honolulu to Tokyo, December 3, decoded December 12, a long report on signals which lights in houses on the beach on Oahu's east coast would give to show number of United States carriers, battleships, etc., in the harbor, and the code signals which would be broadcast through want ads over Station KGMK in Honolulu.

6. From Honolulu to Tokyo, December 5, decoded December 10, lists ships in port as eight battleships, three light cruisers and 16 destroyers.

7. From Tokyo to Honolulu, December 6 (December 5, U. S. time), decoded December 12, "Please wire immediately re the latter part of my No. 123 (message number) the movements of the fleet subsequent to the fourth.

8. From Honolulu to Tokyo, December 6, decoded December 8, reports that there were no barrage balloons at Pearl Harbor and that "there is considerable opportunity left to take advantake for a surprise attack against these places."

Returning GIs Likely to Jam Holiday Travel

Christmas travel, already limited by strikes and demands by the armed forces for space, may be further restricted, it became known at the Office of Defense Transportation yesterday.

Dispatches from the West Coast report that thousands of veterans of the Pacific War are filling all available barracks space awaiting transportation to their homes.

Already 72 per cent of all Pullman coaches have been set aside for military travel. Yesterday an additional 375 were given the armed forces to enable veterans to get home for the holidays.

A recent order reserving 70 per cent of the seats on four transcontinental airlines for the same purpose, may be increased. The present reservations only affect travel from coast to coast. It may be necessary for the services to be granted reservations on hauls from the Pacific Coast to intermediate points, and may involve more than the present four lines.

Await Shipment Home

A recent strike of mattress makers delayed the delivery of a large number of specially-built troop sleepers to be used in transporting veterans to their homes. However a number of sleepers have recently been delivered, according to J. Monroe Johnson, director of ODT, which will help relieve the load on regular Pullmans.

The commanding general of the Seattle port of embarkation reported yesterday that five carloads of soldiers there are ready and awaiting shipment home. Barracks at Portland, Seattle and Tacoma are reported filled to capacity with about 30,000 men, and 11,000 more are expected in the next two days in the Seattle-Tacoma area.

Spokesmen for the Santa Fe, Southern Pacific and Western Pacific railroads have reported that recently arrived troops in San Francisco are creating a sudden passenger overload. The roads, in a joint statement, said they were told to prepare for 405,000 while 465,000 servicemen have arrived. In Los Angeles three to four-day delays are reported in getting veterans started homeward, with no signs of the situation clearing.

investigation of all phases of United States foreign policy continued in Congress, with resolutions for such inquiries introduced in both the House and the Senate.

Hurley in resigning asserted that certain pro-Communist career diplomats have promoted disunity in China and that the policy making machinery of the United States is divided against itself.

Senator Wherry (Neb.), Republican whip, declared yesterday:

"I want a real investigation. I'm not going to be satisfied with the questioning of General Hurley and Secretary Byrnes by the Foreign Relations Committee.

"General Hurley's charges call for a thorough investigation and I believe the country will demand it.

"The fathers and mothers of those boys across the water are entitled to know what's the matter with the State Department and our foreign policy and not only what it is, but why it is, and why we are on three ends of the situation in China."

server in Germany during ten recent weeks. Price recommended sweeping changes to avoid failure of Allied objectives for a peaceful, rebuilt Germany.

The President said that revisions of the Potsdam declaration, which is the basic Allied agreement on Germany, are being sought in negotiations with the other Allied powers and that particularly the unanimity plan for voting in the Allied control council at Berlin is under discussion.

Against Special Meetings

Would that have to be worked out finally in another Big Three meeting? Did the President favor another Big Three meeting?

The President said no, he is not in favor of any special conferences, he wants the United Nations to do its job. The League of Nations, he remarked, was ruined by special conferences.

He hopes, he said, that the United Nations will take over these current world problems in the next 90 days or so. He stressed that he supports the organization wholeheartedly and wants to see it work. To a questioner he said he believes most other nations support it equally well.

The United Nations Organization is scheduled to be fully organized at London in January.

May End Colorful Era

Mr. Truman's statement may mark the end of a colorful and dramatic era in American diplomacy over the period of the second World War. President Roosevelt began the top level wartime conferences on an Anglo-American basis in August, 1941, when he met Winston Churchill aboard a warship in the North Atlantic. There they produced the "Atlantic Charter."

The Roosevelt-Churchill meetings expanded into Big Three gatherings in November, 1943, when the American and British leaders met Premier Stalin in Tehran. Little more than a year later those three gathered again at Yalta on the Black Sea for their second historic session and in July of this year, President Truman rounded out the third of a series with Stalin and Churchill, and later Prime Minister Attlee, at Berlin.

While the President considered the Berlin meeting quite successful, according to intimates, he came away from it with a feeling of dislike for a big shot personal diplomacy and a determination that if there had to be another such gathering it should be held not in the European area, but in the United States.

Va. Scotch Ration Is Liberalized

Richmond, Va., Nov. 29 (AP).—The Christmas bowl in Virginia, for those who like it spiked, may flow with an extra tenth of Scotch whisky.

Except for the possibility of squeezeing out an extra tenth of Scotch, Christmas liquor rations will be the same as November supplies, according to the Virginia Alcoholic Beverage Control Board.

Those who want Scotch for Christmas may be able to get an extra tenth out of their coupons because only a half coupon will be required for Scotch whisky in bottles of one tenth size. Heretofore it took a whole coupon for one bottle of Scotch, regardless of whether it was a fifth or a tenth. So, when Scotch is only available in one tenth bottles, it will require only one half coupon.

ODT Takes Control Of Great Lakes Unit

President Says Order Due to Labor Strife; Wife and Daughter at His Press Session

Yesterday's presidential press conference, attended by Mr. Truman's wife and daughter, was opened with the announcement that ODT has been ordered to take over the Great Lakes Towing Co., in Cleveland, because of labor disputes.

Following his announcement, the President said he has reappointed William E. Lee of Idaho and William J. Patterson of North Dakota to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Lynn U. Stambaugh of North Dakota was appointed to the board of the Export-Import Bank.

All three are Republicans, Mr. Truman noted.

Questioned by Reporters

After Mr. Truman's announcements, reporters began their questions.

"Mr. Ross said we might expect your appointments to the Anglo-American Palestine Commission today. Are they ready?"

The President said they were not ready.

"Did you have any conversation about prior approval or prior acquiescence to the Wagner resolution for a Jewish Commonwealth?"

Mr. Truman replied that he did have some conversations on that subject and was not opposed to it when he was Vice President. He does not favor it now because conditions have changed. If the resolution were passed now there would be no reason for appointing a fact-finding body, he said.

Not Fearful of Russia

After negatively answering the questions of whether he feared Russia would not cooperate in world peace or would provoke another war by such noncooperation, the President was asked:

"What would the effect of a great strike be on reconversion?"

It would hold it back, of course, was the President's answer.

He declined to say what the Administration would do in the event of such a strike, but told reporters it would be handled when it comes.

When asked, he said he agreed with Byron Price's recommended revision of the Potsdam Declaration, and said steps are being taken in that direction. The entire declaration, however, would not be revised, he said—just certain phases of it.

"Could you throw any light on what our effort towards revision are?" he was asked.

The answer was no.

"Does that have anything to do with the veto power of the control council for Germany?"

Refuses to Be Specific

It is one of the things that will be under consideration, Mr. Truman replied, but he said that it was a matter of negotiation and he didn't want to be specific because it might ruin the negotiations.

Mr. Truman was quick to answer no to the next question—would the veto provision be discussed in another Big Three conference?

The President repeated several times that he was not in favor of special conferences. The League of Nations was spoiled by special conferences, he said, and he wants the UNO to work.

caGia.cereh;timsespecailvhmmhhm

"Is the UNO reaching the point where it can take over?"

It will shortly, Mr. Truman answered, in about 90 days.

"That will obviate the necessity of three- or four-power conferences?" he was asked.

That is what the United Nations Organization is for, the President replied.

Has Many Resignations

"Have you received the resignation of Daniel Bell as Undersecretary of the Treasury?"

Mr. Truman said he had whole drawer full of resignations, but had not received Mr. Bell's.

"When was the Hurley resignation put in the drawer?" he was asked.

This morning, was the President's reply. But it has not reached him formally, he added.

He said he would rather not discuss the accusations made by General Hurley.

"Mr. President, Senator Fulbright said the worst thing about your Administration in claiming your foreign policy was just played by ear."

Senator Fulbright has the right to his opinion, just as the President has the right to his, Mr. Truman said.

"But that's a terrible thing to say to a musician. Do you think you're playing in tune?" the reporter continued.

The President said he was playing the music.

"Mr. President, who are you betting on next Saturday—Army or Navy?"

Mr. Truman was neutral—he has to be, he sighed. Half for the Army and half for the Navy.

President's Fear of Inflation Cited in Reconversion Report

A picture of reconversion progress since peace, generally hopeful except for the strike situation and the continuing threat of inflation, was presented to the Nation yesterday by President Truman.

But the President warned that despite the good report the Nation must bear in mind that the difficulties we are facing are just as great as they ever were in the history of our country. His particular fear, he indicated, was inflation. He characterized the danger of an upsurge in prices as more menacing than the threat of deflation.

Since VJ-Day

Mr. Truman's report covered the first 100 days since VJ-Day. Employment, production, business activity, physical reconversion of factories and removal of wartime controls, past progress and future prospects were presented in an encouraging light.

Even unemployment was "far less than had been expected," the President said. "This means that the disruption of our economy has been less drastic than anticipated," he added.

The text of the statement follows:

In the first 100 days of reconversion, we have made the following progress:

MANPOWER—The great part of the layoffs from war plants has now been completed, except in the shipyards. Employment in nonwar activities has increased since VJ-Day. Total employment has now returned to the VJ-Day level and is expected to continue to rise.

Less Unemployment

Unemployment so far is less than had been expected. This means that the disruption of our economy has been less drastic than anticipated. However, we are still in a transition period. The rapid demobilization of the armed forces will undoubtedly increase the unemployment total over the next few months.

During these first 100 days, 3,500,000 men and women have been demobilized. We have stepped the rate up to 50,000 a day, and expect to continue at this pace.

PLANT RECONVERSION—The job of reconverting our plants from war to peace is virtually completed. Ninety-three per cent of all plants have been cleared in 60 days or less after request. Two thirds of these plants were cleared within 40 days or less. Twenty-seven billion dollars worth of war contracts have been canceled since the surrender of Japan. Approximately one third of the 122,000 war contracts canceled since VJ-Day have been settled.

Many Controls Lifted

LIFTING OF WARTIME CONTROLS—All war manpower controls were lifted the day after Japan surrendered. OPA has removed several hundred items from price control, removed all rationing except for sugar and tires, and completed the pricing of reconversion goods almost 100 per cent. CPA has reduced orders and regulations on its books to 55 from a wartime peak of 650. ODT has 14 orders standing, as compared with 3050 during the war. About 85 per cent of wartime export controls have been lifted, and 75 per cent of wartime import controls.

PRODUCTION—Most peacetime products are already in production or ready to roll. The metal-working trades on which we depend for most of our consumer durable goods are in such shape that they expect by the middle of 1946 to ship goods at 2½ times the 1939 rate.

BUSINESS ACTIVITY — Business continues good. Here are some indications:

Retail sales, up 10 per cent now, compared with the same period last year; steel ingot production, back up to 82 per cent capacity today, as compared with 80 per cent capacity right after VJ-Day; electric power production, now only 14 per cent below the wartime peak.

Upsurge in Strikes

LABOR DISPUTES—There has been an upsurge of strikes since VJ-Day. The increase has been due in part to the fact that all parties held their grievances in check during the war and observed the no-strike pledge. New strikes since August total approximately 1500, involving about 1,500,000 workers. During the same time 924 threatened strikes were averted, involving about 400,000 workers, and 868 strikes were settled, involving about 525,000 workers. Labor dispute cases settled through November 24 numbered 2821, involving about 1,150,000 workers. Time lost through work stoppages since August is estimated at .76 of 1 per cent of the total working time available.

STABILIZATION. The cost of living has declined .3 of 1 per cent since the surrender of Japan, compared with a rise of approximately 1.3 per cent in a comparable period after the last war. Some of the decrease this time, however, is due to the seasonal decrease in some food prices. Direct controls over wages and salaries have been removed in most fields, but increases have not been allowed to affect price ceilings or costs to the United States, except in some specific and narrowly defined cases to correct maladjustments or inequities.

Inflationary pressures are still great, and danger signals pointing to a further building up through the winter and spring are the rise of real estate, wholesale and raw materials prices. We must continue to hold the line. We cannot permit inflation.

Distress Signals

'Old Lady in Black' Sought As Kidnaper of Chelsea Baby

Seen Taking Child By Girl, 7; Mother Appeals for Care

Chelsea, Mass., Nov. 29 (AP).—Police searched every vacant house, cellar, alleyway and field in Chelsea and neighboring communities frantically today for a trace of 6-months-old Ronald Carlan, jr., kidnaped near his home yesterday afternoon.

The child's mother, Mrs. Rose Carlan, 23, after a sleepless night during which search efforts proved unsuccessful, pleaded with newsmen to "tell whoever took the baby to be sure and keep on giving him cough medicine because he has a bad cold and I think it may turn to whooping cough."

As the baby's father MM 1/c James J. Carlan, serving aboard the USS Dawson at Oakland, Calif., was rushing home, police continued to seek an elderly woman, dressed in black.

They quoted 7-year-old Barabar Dioptt (eq) as saying she saw "an old lady dressed in black with tulips in her hat" take the child from the carriage after carefully wrapping him in a shawl and taking his nursing bottle.

Tum Sudens Ready To Meet Demands of Abductors of Son, 3

Berkeley, Calif., Nov. 29 (U.P.)—Mr. and Mrs Joseph tum Suden, parents of 3-year-old Dickie tum Suden, who disappeared November 1 from his mountain cabin near Downieville, said today they were "ready and willing to meet any and all reasonable demands and instructions of the persons holding our son."

As FBI agents continued an active interest in the child's disappearance, the wealthy parents said they had moved to Berkeley "for the sole purpose of facilitating contact between the person or persons we believe to have taken our son."

"I earnestly request and wish assurance and proof from any person contacting me that he had my boy and that the boy is alive and well at this time," tum Suden said.

He promised "my most sincere assurance" that he would cooperate fully with them for Dickie's safe return and said all law-enforcement agencies had promised not to interfere.

The only trace of the child was a mitten found on a high crag.

Yugoslavia Now Republic, Belgrade Says

London, Nov. 29 (AP).—The Belgrade radio announced tonight that Yugoslavia became a federated republic today when both the constituent and national assemblies unanimously approved a proclamation read by Marshal Tito.

The proclamation, the broadcast said, deprived youthful King Peter of "all his vested rights."

The monarch, who has been living in London since Yugoslavia was invaded by the Germans, charged tonight that creation of the republic violated an agreement made last February by Tito and former Yugoslave Foreign Minister Ivan Subasic.

This agreement, Peter asserted, set up a three-man regency which was to govern the country until conditions were settled enough to allow the people to vote on whether they wanted a continuation of the monarchy.

People Had No Choice, Peter Says

Peter said Tito's proclamation was issude long before the country had reached "any degree of freedom and stability" and "had the effect of removing" a decision on the monarchy "from out of the hands of the people themselves an dplacing it entirely within his own and those of the National Front (Tito's political party)."

The Belgrade broadcast said that representatives of the United States, Russia and Britain attended the ceremoies at which the monarchy was abolished.

Peter also criticised elections held in Yugoslavia earlier this month in which Tito's National Front candidates were unopposed. The question of the monarchy was not voted on. Opposition parties refused to ente ra list of candidates on the grounds the elections were undemocratic.

Peter declared the elections' results "could in no way convince anyone that the will of the people has been tested and freely expressed."

"Joseph Broz-Tito Slavery"

The 22-year-old monarch added that he did not call upon the Yugoslavs to fight against the Nazis and Fascists "in order that my freedom loving people should fall into another and similar slavery, namely that of Joseph Broz-Tito."

"I am fully conscious of my duties toward my country and despite all the steps taken against me by the present regime I shall continue to follow the clear dictates of my conscience in order to liberate Yugoslavia from tyranny no matter whence it comes," he said.

Shope Exonerated In Traffic Death Of Vincent Dorio

A coroner's jury yesterday exonerated Leonard Shope, 26, of 2819 R st. se., of blame in the traffic death of Vincent Dorio, 61, of 437 14th st. se.

Dorio was struck Tuesday night by Shope's car in the 400 block of Kentucky ave. se. He died in Casualty Hospital the following day.

Meanwhile, Navy Lieut. John D. Archbold, 34, of 3905 Reservoir rd. nw., son of a socially prominent family, remained in critical condition at Emergency Hospital. He was injured Wednesday in a crash at Virginia and New Hampshire aves. nw.

Iwo Jima Bravery Wins Silver Star For Ickes' Son

Marine First Lieut. Raymond Ickes, son of Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes, was awarded the Silver Star at Marine Headquarters yesterday for gallantry at Iwo Jima.

Lieut. Ickes

During an attack on an enemy airfield, the citation stated, Lieutenant Ickes cleared a murderous barrage to reorganize his platoon. He was seriously wounded later in the Iwo Jima fighting.

Murray, Lewis Parley Rivals, Both Win Point

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

Philip Murray and John L. Lewis, bitterest of rivals at the labor-management conference, both won victories yesterday on the same vote.

At the first full session of the conference since its initial meetings more than three weeks ago, the United Mine Workers' leader gained the right to veto any action of the conference. The CIO chief, meantime, won a parliamentary battle which will help his campaign for higher industrial wages.

The developments came in a complicated and legalistic wrangle over the conference voting procedure. The rules committee had proposed that all conference action be taken by an affirmative vote of at least 15 out of the 18 delegates of each side. With AFL support, Lewis asked that no action be approved unless there was one affirmative vote from each of the six organizations represented at the conference.

Minors Also Get Voice

This would mean that no recommendation could pass unless it were favored by the "minor" labor organizations at the conference, the UMW and the Railroad Brotherhoods, as well as by the major groups, the AFL, CIO, National Association of Manufacturers and United States Chamber of Commerce.

Murray agreed to the proposal on the condition that the same rule apply to the actions of the executive committee in submiting resolutions to the full conference.

The conference finally adopted a resolution that all action both of the conference and of the executive committee be by unanimous vote.

Helps Lewis' Prestige

Lewis' victory was largely one of prestige, for there is little on the agenda of the conference of major importance. There is almost nothing on the schedule the acceptance or rejection of which will make much difference to the UMW in particular or to the course of labor relations in general.

For Murray, however, the rule lets him stop the executive committee reporting to the conference floor a substitute resolution to one on wages which he originally proposed. The substitute is said to be much weaker than Murray's demand for indorsement of the principle that "substantially higher wages are imperative."

It was favored by management, the AFL and Lewis, however. Had it been reported out, the CIO votes would ultimately have defeated it, but Murray could not make capital—as he is expected to do today—of the charge that the UMW and the AFL refuse to act on a wage resolution.

In Embarrassing Corner

As it now stands, Murray will raise the question of his resolution today on the conference floor. It will be defeated, but Lewis and William Green, AFL head, both committed against it, will be placed in the embarrassing public position of voting against approval of "higher wages".

The conference adopted the reports of three of its working subcommittees.

One recommended strengthening the Labor Department Conciliation Service, by more generous Congressional appropriations and improved methods of selecting and training its personnel.

Umpire For Disputes

A second committee, recommending on procedures to be followed after a contract has been negotiated between a union and a company, indorsed a principle which is likely to be the conference's most substantial achievement. It provides that an impartial umpire or chairman rule on disputes arising under terms of the contracts, and that his decision be binding. It is this way, it is hoped, employed grievances and disputes over the interpretation of contract provisions will be settled, and not allowed to develop into strikes.

A third committee, whose report was adopted, laid out a "primer" of precepts for parties about to enter into their first labor contract.

Today's full sessions of the conference, beginning at 11 a. m., are expected to end the conference, in session since November 5.

BACKACHE, LEG PAINS MAY BE DANGER SIGN
Of Tired Kidneys
If backache and leg pains are making you miserable, don't just complain and do nothing about them. Nature may be warning you that your kidneys need attention.
The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.
If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.
Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, a stimulant diuretic, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. Doan's give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills.

Delays in German Recovery To Be Costly to U.S., 'Ike' Says

Frankfurt, Germany, Nov. 29 (AP).—General Eisenhower, again criticizing French opposition to a central administration for Germany, declared today that revival of German trade, industry and agriculture was necessary to save the American taxpayers money.

A "humanitarian" policy requires that food be imported into Germany without thought of eventual repayment, Eisenhower said in a report on conditions in Germany in October, his last monthly summation before he left to become U. S. Army Chief of Staff.

Only yesterday the White House disclosed a report on Germany to President Truman by former Censorship Director Byron Price which criticized French occupational policies.

Eisenhower declared that revival of German agriculture, industry and trade, which is being encouraged by the military government, and the organization of German administrative machinery to assume responsibility for the program, were necessary to avoid expense to the American treasury.

"Although in a broad and historical sense the Germans are entirely responsible for their present economic predicament, it is American policy to take steps to prevent widespread starvation or disease so far as is feasible," Eisenhower said.

"This humanitarian policy requires imports of food and other items without positive assurance that an economically weakened German nation can ever pay for them.

"It is desirable from every point of view to build up as soon as possible a minimum German economy, which can provide without outside aid essential German civilian needs contemplated under the Potsdam agreement."

Esenhower said that while restlessness has been noted in Germany "there is no indication of organized resistance, and the number of crimes of violence is in the aggregate still very small." His report a month earlier had said there was dangerous unrest which was "just one step" from organized resistance.

He warned that an influx of refugees and returning prisoners of war, boosting the population in the American zone to 20 million, "carries with it potential dangers of unrest and disease, despite all efforts to house and feed these people."

Regarding German politics, Eisenhower said the time-consuming effort required of Germans "merely to keep alive and to prepare for the coming winter leaves few hours and little energy for other activities."

"Wide sections of the population consider that the parties and leaders which present themselves today are to a large extent the same as were unable to solve the problems of the Weimar republic, or to prevent the coming of Hitler, and that these leaders seem now to put forward very little that looks new or constructive," he said.

He conceded that some "politically conscious" Germans feel that elections scheduled for January are premature, but said the voting was intended to "initiate the population into a democratic process as quickly as possible."

Byron Price's Charges in U.S. Anger French

Paris, Nov. 29 (U.P.).—French government quarters commented angrily today on the charge of Byron Price, President Truman's special envoy, that France was contributing to Allied difficulties in Germany.

A foreign office spokesman said: "All the Byron Prices in the world will never make us agree to putting the Saar, the Ruhr or the Rhineland again under a central Berlin administration."

With the exception of these areas, the spokesman said, France, reluctantly but in a spirit of conciliation, might ultimately agree to a central administration.

For some time, the spokesman said, it had been evident that other countries were seeking to blame alleged French stubbornness because things were going wrong in Germany.

Another potential dispute was brought into the open today when it was announced that the French government had sent notes of protest to the United States, Great Britain and Russia against revival of the German Mitropa Co. which, until the surrender, operated sleeping and dining car facilities on railroads in Germany and central and southeastern Europe.

200 Students Enrolled in CAP Take Basic Aviation Lessons

More than 200 high school students, both boys and girls, are enrolled in Washington area squadrons of the Civil Air Patrol for basic aviation training.

The students, who wear regulation Army cadet uniforms with Civil Air Patrol Cadet pins, attend two-hour classes one night a week at local high schools and take 15-minute orientation flights weekends at Hyde Field in Clinton, Md.

Two Army Planes Used

Two PT-17 Army training planes have been assigned to the squadrons for the flights. The students do not learn to fly, but are shown how a plane is handled in the air. Flying lessons are not included in the training but a number of students are taking private instructions.

Ten senior members of the CAP, specialists in subjects related to flying, instruct the weekly classes on a volunteer basis. Subjects include navigation, meteorology, aircraft structure and military courtesy—all part of an air force cadet school's curriculum.

Students who finish 100 hours of work are given a file of their records. Air Force cadet schools will credit them for the work completed and they can enroll with an advanced status if they so desire.

Air Force Auxiliary

As an auxiliary of the Army Air Forces, the CAP squadron is under Army regulations. It is open to any boy or girl between the ages of 15 and 18 years who can pass a simple medical examination.

"We hope to build up a backlog of future pilots and to spread interest in aviation generally," Capt. Walter Lake, local commander, said.

2900 Aides Ready For Clothes Drive

A national campaign to collect 100 million garments for war victims has more than 2900 local chairmen lined up so far, Chairman Henry J. Kaiser reported yesterday.

Wisconsin has the largest number of community leaders—237—ready for the drive to be conducted January 7 to 31. New York has 178, Texas 163, Pennsylvania 132, Illinois 131 and Nebraska 127.

The campaign, called the Victory Clothing Collection for Overseas Relief, will receive shoes and bedding also. It is conducted on behalf of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration.

Calfill to Buy Gas Company's Former Site

Victor Cahill, local real estate man, will purchase all property of the Washington Gas Light Co. in the block bounded by 9th, 10th, D and E sts. nw., it was learned yesterday.

The property, comprising 20,908 square feet, has a current assessed value of $353,970. It includes a two-story and basement building at 411-419 10th st. nw., formerly offices of the gas company and now occupied by the United States Panama Canal office, a company warehouse at 928 E st. nw., and parking space at 928 E st. nw.

The transaction is now being recorded. Cahill has not revealed the purchase price or future use of the property, but it is believed it will be used for future parking expansion. Negotiations were recorded through the real estate department of the Munsey Trust Co.

The gas company ended 73 years of continuous occupancy of the 10th street site in 1942 when it moved into a new 12-story $1,500,000 building at the southwest corner of 11th and H sts. nw.

Hospital Association Told How British Regional Plan Works

Baltimore, Nov. 29 (AP).—Dr. Charles T. Maitland, senior medical officer of England's ministry of Health, described today the regional hospital plan now under consideration in England, Scotland and Wales at the opening session of the fifth annual meeting of the Maryland District of Columbia Hospital Association.

The proposed regional plan called for all forms of hospital, medical and surgical service to be supplied within a given region which would have at its center a leading university or medical school, Maitland said.

Patients would not be compelled to enter regional hospitals but would be encouraged to do so, he added. The Briton said the regional proposal grew out of the organization of British hospitals for war.

Maj. Gen. Paul R. Hawley, acting surgeon general of the Veteran's Administration, discussed "the relation of the Veteran's Administration to civilian hospitals in the care of veterans."

Ban on Barbers' Using Unsterilized Clippers Is Topic

A meeting will be held at 2 p.m. Monday in the new Municipal Building to discuss a proposed health department regulation forbidding the use of unsterilized clippers on children 16 years and under in District barber shops.

The regulation was proposed to combat the current scalp ring-worm epidemic among children of school age.

The meeting, announced yesterday by Acting Health Officer Daniel L. Seckinger, will be attended by representatives of barber trade groups, members of the District Board of Barber Examiners and representatives of the United States Public Health Service.

Philippine Status

By Vincente Villamin

What Its Independence Involves

ON JULY 4, 1946, the Philippines will be an independent nation. But its independence will be limited. Under a congressional joint resolution 93, dated June 29, 1944, the United States, according to plans, will erect a military establishment on Philippine territory that will be much greater than the one she had there before independence. This means that the Philippines will be a part of America's plan of defense and offense and will inevitably be involved in any war which America may wage in that section of the world. Thus the Philippines, under an American law, will not have the first attribute of sovereign independence—the power to desist from or to declare war on her own volition.

For all practical purposes, therefore, there will be what amounts to an unwritten military alliance between the two countries. The Philippines will in effect be an American protectorate and be so regarded by other nations. America's aim, besides protecting the Philippines, is to push her strategic spearhead 5000 miles beyond Pearl Harbor, so that in the event of war the battleground will be that much farther away from the American mainland.

IT IS OBVIOUS that a strong and friendly Philippines is a vital element in America's military position in that country as well as in her foreign policy in the Pacific and Asia. This basic fact should underlie plans for the Philippines after independence which the United States Congress is now considering.

The Congress has before it two bills: A Senate bill providing partial compensation for damages caused by the war, the restoration of highways, harbors and the health service, the establishment of inter-island air and sea facilities and the training of Filipinos in certain essential occupations and services, and a House bill defining the trade relations between the two countries.

WHILE THE SENATE bill promotes the reconstruction of the Philippines, the House bill liquidates its vital trade with the United States, ostensibly in 33 years, but effectively in a few years after the increasing tariff duties are applied. It is clear that the House measure will run counter to the military relations between the two countries, for it will sunder their economic bonds and blast the economic life of the Filipino people.

Once the full meaning of joint resolution 93 is recognized, the Philippine-American economic relations might instead be more or less on the following basis:

1. A free trade between them, not for a limited period, but indefinitely, coexisting with America's military establishment. That will not violate, by reason of their special relations, the most-favored-nation principle nor any commitment to abolish trade preferences.

2. A Philippine program to diversify its production of tropical staples needed but not grown in the United States, to reduce its shipments to this country of commodities considered competitive with American products, and to build a sound producer-consumer economy by expanding domestic economic activities.

3. Congress giving the Philippine government the power to impose import duties on luxury goods coming from the United States, as it does on imports from foreign countries, this to be complemented by a Philippine policy of encouraging the importation of all sorts of agricultural and industrial equipments, tools, fertilizers, chemicals and the like, supplemented by the employment of American industrial and business managers and technicians.

THIS THREE-POINT plan will build a complementary instead of a conflicting economy, increase their mutual trade appreciably, and develop the Philippines naturally, thereby lessening its disproportionate dependence on markets overseas. A strong and friendly Philippines will be the result.

This is the time to consider such a plan. After independence it will be too late. To implement it there are two assets available in the Philippines which together amount to over three times the dollar value of the country's annual production: (a) The approximately 500 million dollars which the American Government and members of the armed forces spent since the war and which is now mostly in the hands of Filipinos, and (b) the roughly 500 million dollars which the Congress is expected to appropriate for the payment of Philippine war damages.

If there is no plan and things are allowed to move along the line of least resistance, these assets will be dissipated in non-essential purchases and extravagant expenditures instead of being utilized to build that new producer-consumer economy which will create many small industries, businesses, trades, occupations and services.

To conclude, the liquidation of the Philippine-American economic relations will weaken or wreck the Philippines and possibly throw that nation back as a problem on the United States; and if the economic relations are to continue parallel to the military relations, it is imperative that there be a definite plan to make the Filipino people strong, satisfied and self-sustaining.

Funds For UNRRA

Letters Decry Congress' Stalling

There isn't a farmer in America who would refuse food to a hungry neighbor whether he liked his politics or not. Nor is there a farmer's wife who would let a baby die on her doorstep for lack of milk. It cannot be for these American men and women that they speak whose greed is attempting to tie the strings of profit to American aid for neighbors who are starving, freezing, dying in Europe!

We promised funds for UNRRA's use. Americans do not welch on a promise.

UNRRA administration has not been perfect. But it is the only agency set up to do the job. No new agency could do it in time. But perhaps we just want an excuse to forget it all. We can't see the listless, huge-eyed children, the freezing nomads living in holes in the ground. Let's forget it and take the kids downtown to see Santa Claus. Toys are more plentiful this year, too. When they get to be our age they can worry about dealing with the bitter neurotic survivors who control the continent of Europe.

MILDRED E. LESTER.
Silver Spring, Md., Nov. 25.

We hear a great deal about the communistic influence spreading over Europe. I'm wondering if the people of this country realize one of the greatest contributing factors to this influence. People in Europe do not wish communism. They want freedom, a government of their own choice, a good standard of living, peace, and freedom of religion.

The people of Germany have looked upon the Americans as great liberators. We have conquered the enemy, but what do we take to them—food, clothing, and coal? No! We give them no clothing, no coal to heat what few homes they have left, and food of 1400 calorific value per day if they can get it which, at its best, is a starvation diet. Mothers with several children say they can keep only one alive this winter and must choose which ones must die.

The conditions in other countries are just as bad or worse than in Germany. Before and during the war food and clothing were being shipped to Europe. For some reason, ships are now tied up and but little is being shipped to help curtail a death rate that is expected to be five times as great this winter as during the entire war.

When such conditions are allowed to exist, and the American people sit idly by doing nothing about it, can we blame Europe for going communistic? If such a trend becomes a fact, America can blame herself for it. We have the greatest industrial might on earth. Yet, we are torn with strife when we should be working night and day to help rebuild the confidence of a broken and beaten people in Europe and Asia.

They need food and clothing and need it bad. Somehow the American people must realize the urgent needs of Europe and Asia, and demand that their Government immediately send aid.

W. E. GRIFFIN.
Washington, Nov. 25.

Those Washingtonians who are not already sending relief packages overseas through other channels may wish to join the Community Program for Overseas Relief—a collection of canned goods on behalf of UNRRA. During this week cans of food products of high protein content—meats, pastes, fish, cheese, condensed milk, meat-base soups (nothing in glass, cardboard, cellophane) may be taken to All Souls' Church, 16th and Harvard sts. Mrs. Harold Burton is honorary chairman of the committee in charge. Generous response to this and similar collections would be not only a material contribution but a demonstration to legislators that public opinion is indeed far ahead of them.

Shirley Temple Here to Speak At Women's Dinner Tonight

Shirley Temple came to Washington yesterday not as a screen star but to represent American youth at a conference of women's clubs.

The young bride soon made it clear that she is foremost a wife. She just couldn't keep "my husband, Jack" (Sergeant John Agar), out of the conversation.

Flashing her famous dimples, Shirley insisted the diamond solitaire on the third finger of her left hand be shown prominently in every photograph. Everyone must see the gold bracelet with a football, two hearts and a key, which Jack gave her before their marriage.

"The big heart's him and the little heart's me," she explained proudly, "and he won the basketball. He's a wonderful basketball player."

Shirley will speak on youth conservation at the general Federation of Women's Clubs dinner tonight at the Statler Hotel. She wrote the speech for the occasion and spent the morning giving it a final polish.

"Adults must give youth a chance to do something in their own community," she said. "Lots of young people have no aim, but if the older people will let them help, they'll be good citizens. Youths need jobs in peacetime just as they had jobs during the war."

The recent bride, who stands only 5 feet 2, said she would have tea with Mrs. Harry Truman at the White House today at 5 p. m. She plans to visit Walter Reed and Forest Glen Hospitals, before leaving Washington for California Sunday night.

Parking Unit Opposes Civic Group's Racial Limit Plan

The Parkway Citizens Association in Arlington has instructed its delegates to vote against limitation of membership in the Arlington Civic Federation to members of the Caucasian race.

C. R. Briggs, secretary of the Parkway association, said yesterday the action was taken at the group's regular monthly meeting Wednesday night.

At its October meeting the Arlington Civic Federation heard a proposal by its constitution and by-laws committee to amend the constitution by the membership limitation. The Federation will vote on the amendment at its next meeting, December 4.

Members of the Parkway Association who were against the membership limitation based their objections on the fact that since no color line is drawn in determining obligations to the community, no color line should be drawn limiting membership in an organization which is county-wide in scope, Briggs said.

Parkway has four delegates in the Civic Federation. Approximately 28 organizations, each with four delegates, will be eligible to vote on the proposed amendment.

Delays in German Recovery To Be Costly to U.S., 'Ike' Says

Frankfurt, Germany, Nov. 29 (AP).—General Eisenhower, again criticizing French opposition to a central administration for Germany, declared today that revival of German trade, industry and agriculture was necessary to save the American taxpayers money.

A "humanitarian" policy requires that food be imported into Germany without thought of eventual repayment, Eisenhower said in a report on conditions in Germany in October, his last monthly summation before he left to become U. S. Army Chief of Staff.

Only yesterday the White House disclosed a report on Germany to President Truman by former Censorship Director Byron Price which criticized French occupational policies.

Eisenhower declared that revival of German agriculture, industry and trade, which is being encouraged by the military government, and the organization of German administrative machinery to assume responsibility for the program, were necessary to avoid expense to the American treasury.

"Although in a broad and historical sense the Germans are entirely responsible for their present economic predicament, it is American policy to take steps to prevent widespread starvation or disease so far as is feasible," Eisenhower said.

"This humanitarian policy requires imports of food and other items without positive assurance that an economically weakened German nation can ever pay for them.

"It is desirable from every point of view to build up as soon as possible a minimum German economy, which can provide without outside aid essential German civilian needs contemplated under the Potsdam agreement."

Esenhower said that while restlessness has been noted in Germany "there is no indication of organized resistance, and the number of crimes of violence is in the aggregate still very small." His report a month earlier had said there was dangerous unrest which was "just one step" from organized resistance.

He warned that an influx of refugees and returning prisoners of war, boosting the population in the American zone to 20 million, "carries with it potential dangers of unrest and disease, despite all efforts to house and feed these people."

Regarding German politics, Eisenhower said the time-consuming effort required of Germans "merely to keep alive and to prepare for the coming winter leaves few hours and little energy for other activities."

"Wide sections of the population consider that the parties and leaders which present themselves today are to a large extent the same as were unable to solve the problems of the Weimar republic, or to prevent the coming of Hitler, and that these leaders seem now to put forward very little that looks new or constructive," he said.

He conceded that some "politically conscious" Germans feel that elections scheduled for January are premature, but said the voting was intended to "initiate the population into a democratic process as quickly as possible."

Byron Price's Charges in U.S. Anger French

Paris, Nov. 29 (U.P.).—French government quarters commented angrily today on the charge of Byron Price, President Truman's special envoy, that France was contributing to Allied difficulties in Germany.

A foreign office spokesman said: "All the Byron Prices in the world will never make us agree to putting the Saar, the Ruhr or the Rhineland again under a central Berlin administration."

With the exception of these areas, the spokesman said, France, reluctantly but in a spirit of conciliation, might ultimately agree to a central administration.

For some time, the spokesman said, it had been evident that other countries were seeking to blame alleged French stubbornness because things were going wrong in Germany.

Another potential dispute was brought into the open today when it was announced that the French government had sent notes of protest to the United States, Great Britain and Russia against revival of the German Mitropa Co. which, until the surrender, operated sleeping and dining car facilities on railroads in Germany and central and southeastern Europe.

200 Students Enrolled in CAP Take Basic Aviation Lessons

More than 200 high school students, both boys and girls, are enrolled in Washington area squadrons of the Civil Air Patrol for basic aviation training.

The students, who wear regulation Army cadet uniforms with Civil Air Patrol Cadet pins, attend two-hour classes one night a week at local high schools and take 15-minute orientation flights weekends at Hyde Field in Clinton, Md.

Two Army Planes Used

Two PT-17 Army training planes have been assigned to the squadrons for the flights. The students do not learn to fly, but are shown how a plane is handled in the air. Flying lessons are not included in the training but a number of students are taking private instructions.

Ten senior members of the CAP, specialists in subjects related to flying, instruct the weekly classes on a volunteer basis. Subjects include navigation, meteorology, aircraft structure and military courtesy—all part of an air force cadet school's curriculum.

Students who finish 100 hours of work are given a file of their records. Air Force cadet schools will credit them for the work completed and they can enroll with an advanced status if they so desire.

Air Force Auxiliary

"As an auxiliary of the Army Air Forces, the CAP squadron is under Army regulations. It is open to any boy or girl between the ages of 15 and 18 years who can pass a simple medical examination.

"We hope to build up a backlog of future pilots and to spread interest in aviation generally," Capt. Walter Lake, local commander, said.

2900 Aides Ready For Clothes Drive

A national campaign to collect 100 million garments for war victims has more than 2900 local chairmen lined up so far, Chairman Henry J. Kaiser reported yesterday.

Wisconsin has the largest number of community leaders—237—ready for the drive to be conducted January 7 to 31. New York has 178, Texas 163, Pennsylvania 132, Illinois 131 and Nebraska 127.

The campaign, called the Victory Clothing Collection for Overseas Relief, will receive shoes and bedding also. It is conducted on behalf of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration.

Cahill to Buy Gas Company's Former Site

Victor Cahill, local real estate man, will purchase all property of the Washington Gas Light Co. in the block bounded by 9th, 10th, D and E sts. nw., it was learned yesterday.

The property, comprising 20,909 square feet, has a current assessed value of $353,970. It includes a two-story and basement building at 411-419 10th st. nw., formerly offices of the gas company and now occupied by the United States Panama Canal office, a company warehouse at 926 E st. nw., and parking space at 928 E st. nw.

The transaction is now being recorded. Cahill has not revealed the purchase price or future use of the property, but it is believed it will be used for future parking expansion. Negotiations were recorded through the real estate department of the Munsey Trust Co.

The gas company ended 73 years of continuous occupancy of the 10th street site in 1942 when it moved into a new 12-story $1,500,000 building at the southwest corner of 11th and H sts. nw.

Hospital Association Told How British Regional Plan Works

Baltimore, Nov. 29 (AP).—Dr. Charles T. Maitland, senior medical officer of England's ministry of Health, described today the regional hospital plan now under consideration in England, Scotland and Wales at the opening session of the fifth annual meeting of the Maryland District of Columbia Hospital Association.

The proposed regional plan called for all forms of hospital, medical and surgical service to be supplied within a given region which would have at its center a leading university or medical school, Maitland said.

Patients would not be compelled to enter regional hospitals but would be encouraged to do so, he added. The Briton said the regional proposal grew out of the organization of British hospitals for war.

Ban on Barbers' Using Unsterilized Clippers Is Topic

A meeting will be held at 2 p. m. Monday in the new Municipal Building to discuss a proposed health department regulation forbidding the use of unsterilized clippers on children 16 years and under in District barber shops.

The regulation was proposed to combat the current scalp ring-worm epidemic among children of school age.

The meeting, announced yesterday by Acting Health Officer Daniel L. Seckinger, will be attended by representatives of barber trade groups, members of the District Board of Barber Examiners and representatives of the United States Public Health Service.

MADE FRESH DAILY

Philippine Status

By Vincente Villamin

What Its Independence Involves

ON JULY 4, 1946, the Philippines will be an independent nation. But its independence will be limited. Under a congressional joint resolution 93, dated June 29, 1944, the United States, according to plans, will erect a military establishment on Philippine territory that will be much greater than the one she had there before independence. This means that the Philippines will be a part of America's plan of defense and offense and will inevitably be involved in any war which America may wage in that section of the world. Thus the Philippines, under an American law, will not have the first attribute of sovereign independence—the power to desist from or to declare war on her own volition.

For all practical purposes, therefore, there will be what amounts to an unwritten military alliance between the two countries. The Philippines will in effect be an American protectorate and be so regarded by other nations. America's aim, besides protecting the Philippines, is to push her strategic spearhead 5000 miles beyond Pearl Harbor, so that in the event of war the battleground will be that much farther away from the American mainland.

IT IS OBVIOUS that a strong and friendly Philippines is a vital element in America's military position in that country as well as in her foreign policy in the Pacific and Asia. This basic fact should underlie plans for the Philippines after independence which the United States Congress is now considering.

The Congress has before it two bills: A Senate bill providing partial compensation for damages caused by the war, the restoration of highways, harbors and the health service, the establishment of inter-island air and sea facilities and the training of Filipinos in certain essential occupations and services, and a House bill defining the trade relations between the two countries.

WHILE THE SENATE bill promotes the reconstruction of the Philippines, the House bill liquidates its vital trade with the United States, ostensibly in 33 years, but effectively in a few years after the increasing tariff duties are applied. It is clear that the House measure will run counter to the military relations between the two countries, for it will sunder their economic bonds and blast the economic life of the Filipino people.

Once the full meaning of joint resolution 93 is recognized, the Philippine-American economic relations might instead be more or less on the following basis:

1. A free trade between them, not for a limited period, but indefinitely, coexisting with America's military establishment. That will not violate, by reason of their special relations, the most-favored-nation principle nor any commitment to abolish trade preferences.

2. A Philippine program to diversify its production of tropical staples needed but not grown in the United States, to reduce its shipments to this country of commodities considered competitive with American products, and to build a sound producer-consumer economy by expanding domestic economic activities.

3. Congress giving the Philippine government the power to impose import duties on luxury goods coming from the United States, as it does on imports from foreign countries, this to be complemented by a Philippine policy of encouraging the importation of all sorts of agricultural and industrial equipments, tools, fertilizers, chemicals and the like, supplemented by the employment of American industrial and business managers and technicians.

THIS THREE-POINT plan will build a complementary instead of a conflicting economy, increase their mutual trade appreciably, and develop the Philippines naturally, thereby lessening its disproportionate dependence on markets overseas. A strong and friendly Philippines will be the result.

This is the time to consider such a plan. After independence it will be too late. To implement it there are two assets available in the Philippines which together amount to over three times the dollar value of the country's annual production: (a) The approximately 500 million dollars which the American Government and members of the armed forces spent since the war and which is now mostly in the hands of Filipinos, and (b) the roughly 500 million dollars which the Congress is expected to appropriate for the payment of Philippine war damages.

If there is no plan and things are allowed to move along the line of least resistance, these assets will be dissipated in non-essential purchases and extravagant expenditures instead of being utilized to build that new producer-consumer economy which will create many small industries, businesses, trades, occupations and services.

To conclude, the liquidation of the Philippine-American economic relations will weaken or wreck the Philippines and possibly throw that nation back as a problem on the United States; and if the economic relations are to continue parallel to the military relations, it is imperative that there be a definite plan to make the Filipino people strong, satisfied and self-sustaining.

Shirley Temple Here to Speak At Women's Dinner Tonight

Shirley Temple came to Washington yesterday not as a screen star but to represent American youth at a conference of women's clubs.

The young bride soon made it clear that she is foremost a wife. She just couldn't keep "my husband, Jack" (Sergeant John Agar), out of the conversation.

Flashing her famous dimples, Shirley insisted the diamond solitaire on the third finger of her left hand be shown prominently in every photograph. Everyone must see the gold bracelet with a football, two hearts and a key, which Jack gave her before their marriage.

"The big heart's him and the little heart's me," she explained proudly, "and he won the basketball. He's a wonderful basketball player."

Shirley will speak on youth conservation at the general Federation of Women's Clubs dinner tonight at the Statler Hotel. She wrote the speech for the occasion and spent the morning giving it a final polish.

"Adults must give youth a chance to do something in their own community," she said. "Lots of young people have no aim, but if the older people will let them help, they'll be good citizens. Youths need jobs in peacetime just as they had jobs during the war."

The recent bride, who stands only 5 feet 2, said she would have tea with Mrs. Harry Truman at the White House today at 5 p. m. She plans to visit Walter Reed and Forest Glen Hospitals, before leaving Washington for California Sunday night.

Police Rescue Man Trapped in Restroom

Boston, Nov. 25 (INS).—Police broke down two doors today to rescue a Cambridge man accidently locked in the rest room of a Roxbury gas station.

Neighbors heard the cries of Henry A. Dory, jr., who was so happy at being rescued, he promised two new locks to Manager Marcus Steinberg.

Parking Unit Opposes Civic Group's Racial Limit Plan

The Parkway Citizens Association in Arlington has instructed its delegates to vote against limitation of membership in the Arlington Civic Federation to members of the Caucasian race.

C. R. Briggs, secretary of the Parkway association, said yesterday the action was taken at the group's regular monthly meeting Wednesday night.

At its October meeting the Arlington Civic Federation heard a proposal by its constitution and by-laws committee to amend the constitution by the membership limitation. The Federation will vote on the amendment at its next meeting, December 4.

Members of the Parkway Association who were against the membership limitation based their objections on the fact that since no color line is drawn in determining obligations to the community, no color line should be drawn limiting membership in an organization which is county-wide in scope, Briggs said.

Parkway has four delegates in the Civic Federation. Approximately 28 organizations, each with four delegates, will be eligible to vote on the proposed amendment.

Holding Company Study Recessed Until 1946

Congressional hearings on possible revision of legislation governing holding companies have been recessed until next year.

Chairman Boren (D., Okla.) of a House Interstate Commerce Subcommittee announced the action yesterday. He said in a statement the group wants to study data already acquired.

Funds For UNRRA

Letters Decry Congress' Stalling

There isn't a farmer in America who would refuse food to a hungry neighbor whether he liked his politics or not. Nor is there a farmer's wife who would let a baby die on her doorstep for lack of milk. It cannot be for these American men and women that they speak whose greed is attempting to tie the strings of profit to American aid for neighbors who are starving, freezing, dying in Europe!

We promised funds for UNRRA's use. Americans do not welch on a promise.

UNRRA administration has not been perfect. But it is the only agency set up to do the job. No new agency could do it in time. But perhaps we just want an excuse to forget it all. We can't see the listless, huge-eyed children, the freezing nomads living in holes in the ground. Let's forget it and take the kids downtown to see Santa Claus. Toys are more plentiful this year, too. When they get to be our age they can worry about dealing with the bitter neurotic survivors who control the continent of Europe.

MILDRED E. LESTER.
Silver Spring, Md., Nov. 25.

We hear a great deal about the communistic influence spreading over Europe. I'm wondering if the people of this country realize one of the greatest contributing factors to this influence. People in Europe do not wish communism. They want freedom, a government of their own choice, a good standard of living, peace, and freedom of religion.

The people of Germany have looked upon the Americans as great liberators. We have conquered the enemy, but what do we take to them—food, clothing, and coal? No! We give them no clothing, no coal to heat what few homes they have left, and food of 1400 calorific value per day if they can get it which, at its best, is a starvation diet. Mothers with several children say they can keep only one alive this winter and must choose which ones must die.

The conditions in other countries are just as bad or worse than in Germany. Before and during the war food and clothing were being shipped to Europe. For some reason, ships are now tied up and but little is being shipped to help curtail a death rate that is expected to be five times as great this winter as during the entire war.

When such conditions are allowed to exist, and the American people sit idly by doing nothing about it, can we blame Europe for going communistic? If such a trend becomes a fact, America can blame herself for it. We have the greatest industrial might on earth. Yet, we are torn with strife when we should be working night and day to help rebuild the confidence of a broken and beaten people in Europe and Asia.

They need food and clothing and need it bad. Somehow the American people must realize the urgent needs of Europe and Asia, and demand that their Government immediately send aid.

W. E. GRIFFIN.
Washington, Nov. 25.

Those Washingtonians who are not already sending relief packages overseas through other channels may wish to join the Community Program for Overseas Relief—a collection of canned goods on behalf of UNRRA. During this week cans of food products of high protein content—meats, pastes, fish, cheese, condensed milk, meat-base soups (nothing in glass, cardboard, cellophane) may be taken to All Souls' Church, 16th and Harvard sts. Mrs. Harold Burton is honorary chairman of the committee in charge. Generous response to this and similar collections would be not only a material contribution but a demonstration to legislators that public opinion is indeed far ahead of them.

Policy On China

As the furor over Ambassador Hurley's resignation begins to subside, the one thing that stands out clearly is the need for clarification of our policy in the Far East. The differences between General Hurley and Secretary of State Byrnes appear to be minor. That is evident from the preresignation agreement between the two that General Hurley should return to Chungking with the full confidence of the State Department and the White House. Yet the very fact that such a dispute has arisen intensifies the public confusion over what our policy in China is.

Secretary Byrnes says that there has been no change in our policy as to China. That does not mean much to people who did not understand the policy in the first place. Some light is shed on the situation by the Secretary's statement that our troops now in China "are there to disarm and to repatriate the Japanese armies in compliance to a promise made to the Japanese authorities last August 16." There seems to be an implication here that the United States will not intervene in China's domestic quarrels. But issues of such vital significance should not be left open to misunderstanding or double interpretation.

We think the chief difficulty arises, not from false aims or any other unsoundness in the policy itself, but from inadequate statement and haphazard application of that policy. The United States necessarily favors a strong and united China. That has been our basic policy in the Far East for decades. Now we have the added incentive of assisting the Chinese to become the Far Eastern bulwark of world organization and world security. The lesson to be derived from General Hurley's outburst is that we must pursue this objective, not only with unity of purpose, but also with the utmost skill and diplomacy to avoid embroilment in a great-power scramble for domination of Asia.

The repatriation of Japanese troops in China is a military task to which we are committed and which we must carry out as an essential follow-up to our victory over Japan. But the settlement between the Chungking government and the Chinese Communists is a diplomatic problem with which our troops in China have no concern. It is in this field where international collaboration should be most earnestly sought. The United States and Russia face one another in China. A series of blunders might conceivably make that uphappy land a battleground between the two greatest powers emerging from the recent war. On the other hand, wise management of a complicated situation can, we are convinced, bring the two countries together in a mutual effort to pacify the Far East. The tragedy of the present situation is that so little is being done toward this end.

Confusion and suspicion grow because of the uncertainty of the policy each power is pursuing and because of the lack of direct contact between them. We are in the dangerous period between the failure of the Conference of Foreign Ministers and the establishment of the Security Council. What is most needed, in our opinion, is a special effort to bridge this gap. In previous situations of this sort tensions have been eased and new understandings arrived at by the dispatch of special envoys between Washington and Moscow. Perhaps General Marshall will go to Moscow en route to Chungking as our new Ambassador to China. In any event, we think it is imperative to launch a new effort toward cooperation in this troubled sphere of foreign policy.

Receiving Home

The latest change of mind among the District Commissioners respecting plans for a new Receiving Home for Children is an altogether welcome one. Although they indicated opposition six months ago to Public Welfare Director Huff's proposal of an elaborate and expensive general reception center for juvenile delinquents and dependent children, they veered more recently toward a favorable view of the project. On Wednesday, however, in response to alternative recommendations offered by social workers representing a dozen private welfare organizations, Commissioner Guy Mason promised to halt the present plans until a further conference. We think the delay was well advised.

There is no doubt that the District is in urgent need of a new receiving home. But the comparatively small one suggested by the social workers is vastly preferable to the catch-all institution which Mr. Huff has in mind. Children whose disposition is to be determined by the courts simply because they were deserted or neglected by their parents should clearly not be thrown in with criminal, delinquent or problem children. There is a great body of social experience to attest that association of this kind can have dangerous and contaminating effects on innocent young minds. Moreover, dependent children mingled in such an institution with delinquents would inevitably suffer a serious stigma.

It seems to us, as we have said before, that the social workers who argued for a small institution were quite right in urging that it be limited to the care of such youngsters as have fallen afoul of the law and stand in need of correction. Separate care, principally through subsidized private homes, is much more suitable for children who are not delinquent. We hope that the apparent conversion of the Commissioners on this occasion will be a permanent one.

Plain Speaking

Byron Price's suggestions for the rebuilding of Germany are in effect a strong indictment of the methods that are being followed. They are accompanied by warnings that prompt action is required to avert a possible failure of our efforts to govern a conquered people. As an experienced observer and reporter, Mr. Price's opinions would in any case carry great weight. His views gain added authority because of the decisiveness with which he has enumerated the major defects of occupation policy and the courage with which he has attacked the obstructionist tactics of the French government.

French opposition must be broken down, he asserts, to make it possible to treat Germany as an economic unit, and thus permit national operation of railway, postal and other facilities. If France is bent on the "economic dismemberment" of Germany, she should be forced to declare her objective to the world. Then we should know where we stand and could demand a showdown instead of being parties to a policy of delay and indecision that has already done tremendous damage.

A military government is not equipped to undertake the task of putting Germany on a self-sustaining basis; this undertaking—necessary and urgent as it is—should be shifted to civilian control. That is Mr. Price's second recommendation, carrying the proviso that the change to civilian control should not occur before June 1, 1946, the date originally recommended by General Eisenhower. Time must be allowed to recruit and train first-rate civilian personnel.

Mr. Price also utters a caution against undue haste in de-Nazifying German industry—a process that has, he says, gone further and faster in the American zone than in any other part of Germany. The abrupt substitution of inexperienced individuals for Nazis occupying key positions has seriously handicapped the restoration of essential services. An overrigid exclusionist policy of this sort is patently productive of confusion and inefficiency because the Nazi overlords left few persons not of their own persuasion in positions of responsibility.

Another problem to which the Price report devotes attention is that of food production. Efforts to restore the intricate system of crop controls have been futile because of the present division of authority among the occupying powers as well as removal of Nazi officials familiar with the old system and discharge from the Army of some of the Americans most competent to supervise agricultural operations.

At present Germans are on rations admittedly inadequate. "If starvation comes," Mr. Price warns, "as now seems likely, epidemics and rioting will not be far behind. A ration adequate to prevent starvation would not mean being soft with the German people. It would represent protection to our own occupation troops against disease and disorder, and decency toward our Allies of western Europe, themselves undernourished and easily susceptible to disease." The conclusion to be drawn from this reminder is that self-interest, if not compassion for starving Germans, calls for shipments of American foodstuffs into Germany.

Mr. Price's indictment of our bungling efforts to instil a conviction of guilt into the German people and foster love for democratic institutions is extremely telling. Very little knowledge of human nature is required to convince any sensible person that our propaganda methods are psychologically wrong, calculated to rouse resentment instead of inviting belief in the superiority of our institutions. Mr. Price's formulas for gaining converts to democracy is a commonsense prescription. He thinks we should preach the gospel of hope in the resurrection of a regenerated Germany devoted to the ways of peace, and practice as well as preach tolerance by relaxation of its censorship. Assuredly, the Germans will not become receptive to the teachings of democracy if we din into their ears the repugnant antidemocratic doctrine of collective or mass guilt, that holds every individual German to account for the crimes of their political leaders.

Another reform suggested by Mr. Price is the substitution of a few general principles for the multifarious orders and instructions under which occupation officials now operate. Lack of reasonable discretionary power is a sure way to hamper and decrease the efficiency of the occupying forces.

On the list of do's and don'ts is also a reminder that this is "the wrong time to permit General Eisenhower's armed forces in Germany to be decimated and robbed of military effectiveness by demobilization." This may seem stern advice, so far as men in the occupying forces are concerned, but we can only repeat that threadbare but nonetheless serviceable dictum that the war did not end when hostilities ceased. The work to be done entails heavy sacrifices for the future unless we are willing to confess failure and withdraw from Europe before it has been pacified.

Speed For UNRRA

Every observer reporting on the economic situation in Europe attests to the desperate need for UNRRA's aid. Winter is already aggravating the terrible effects of shortages in food and clothing and shelter. If there should be any break in the stream of relief which UNRRA is supplying, the toll among children, among the aged, the ill, the undernourished, and even among the hardiest fighters for freedom in the liberated lands would be an appalling one—an indelible reproach to all of us who escaped suffering and turned our backs upon those who endured it in a common cause.

The truth is that the stream of UNRRA's relief is very seriously threatened. It seems nearly certain now that the organization will receive the long-delayed 550 million dollars pledged to it a year ago as part of the initial American contribution. But this sum will be entirely exhausted by the end of this year. UNRRA's resources must be refreshed by another contribution from all the nations which escaped the ravages of invasion. The United States, wealthiest among these, is asked to contribute again an amount equal to about 1 per cent of our national income, $1,350,000,000. The Foreign Affairs Committee of the House has already recommended the authorization of this amount. It must still be acted upon, however, by the House as a whole and by the Senate. And once the authorization has been adopted, an appropriation measure must pass both chambers.

The trouble is that Congress plans to recess in just three weeks' time. If it is to furnish UNRRA the money needed before its members go home, it will have to act with resolute dispatch. There is no time left for politicking, no time for the broaching of irrelevant amendments attaching strings to UNRRA's use of the American contribution. If the money is not made available by the end of the year, UNRRA will simply be unable to buy the supplies needed for shipment to Europe and Asia. If there is an interruption in the flow of these supplies, the price will inevitably be paid in human life.

It takes about two months to translate an order for supplies into actual delivery of relief to the needy. In the case of goods which have to be manufactured or processed, the lag between order and delivery may run anywhere from two months to eight. And UNRRA cannot order without money. This is the grim, inescapable situation. Congress has three weeks' time in which to answer the voices of Europe's children and of their mothers and of the men toward whom we look to build democracy upon the ruins of war. These will be but quiet voices. Perhaps they will not be heard in Congress above those that clamor for special conditions and delay. But unanswered, their echoes will haunt all our nights and days for many a year.

Churchill At 71

Today Winston Churchill reaches another milestone in his extraordinarily full, variegated and productive career. No one could blame him if, at this juncture, he should decide to retire from active affairs to enjoy that ease and peace which he so richly deserves. Soldier, war correspondent, biographer, politician, statesman, orator, and, above and beyond all, war leader, he has shown himself to be a man of protean energy and magnificent talents. His grateful people would be only too happy to bestow extensive honors upon him. Yet Churchill, at 71, shows not the slightest sign of wanting to retire.

Instead, with characteristic vigor, Churchill has thrown himself into still a new fight. This week, at a Conservative Party rally, he let loose a blast against the Labor government which demonstrates that he takes his responsibilities as party chieftain seriously. The defeat he and his party suffered in the recent general elections has neither soured him nor weakened his unflagging optimism. He continues to look forward. He still loves a good fight. And, whatever the role he is destined to play while his party is in the opposition, he will continue to be regarded as the man who led England in her darkest hour and thus deserves the homage and gratitude of free men everywhere.

ANT IN THE FOREST

The ant fled on before the storm
My footsteps sounded through the grass;
The little one was sore afraid,
Yet could not stay my right to pass.
She fled, nor stopped a time to see
What mighty dust had swirled about
To shake the leaves and stir the mold,
And put serenity to rout.
Yet were her feet still swift in flight
When stood the thunder, mute and still,
To watch her find her own small door,
Within her own small precious hill.

There were no footprints left to show
The way her fragile feet had sped;
The fear that urged her tiny form
Had left no concrete mark of dread.
Yet, if her way had bent the grass,
Or blazoned through the wood,
I could have had no surer sign
And knowledge of her mood.

Hurley's Charges

By Ernest Lindley

Two Questions Raised

IT IS HARDLY news to Washington observers that many "China hands" have had sour opinions of the Chinese National government. These include not only some of the State Department career men but many other American representatives in China, both civilian and military.

Among the factors which shaped these opinions appeared to be: the corrupt and reactionary influences and practices which they found at Chungking; Chiang Kai-shek's apparent reluctance to use the military resources which he had—which, until late in the war, were admittedly thin but not negligible—to fight the Japanese; and by contrast, the seeming honesty of the Chinese Communist leaders, the popular following which their program—especially their land reforms—attracted and their persistent guerilla activity against the Japanese

MANY OF THESE China observers conceded that the generalissimo was the most practicable rallying point, but insisted that American pressure be exerted effectively to make him reform his regime, cooperate fully with American military authorities, and come to terms with the Communists. Some apparently reached the conclusion that there was no hope of accomplishing anything constructive through the Chungking regime. This view was by no means rare in the summer and fall of 1944, when the Japanese were overrunning General Chennault's airfields and apparently were headed for Kunming. There were many who said that the wobbly National government could not survive. If it had fallen or dissolved, or if the Japanese had cut it off from further military aid by capturing the Chinese terminals of the air route from India and the Ledo Road and pipe lines, American policy in China, at least for military purposes, probably would have had to be rebuilt on a Chinese Communist base.

Roosevelt, however refused to admit that his China policy, centered around Chiang Kai-shek, had collapsed. He sent Major General Hurley to China with a clear directive, of which the first point was to keep the Chinese Nationalist government in the war. He withdrew General Stilwell and sent General Wedemeyer in his stead. Hurley and Wedemeyer obtained the military cooperation which Chiang Kai-shek had refused Stilwell.

ROOSEVELT'S DECISION was vindicated by the results obtained. Hurley's mission was a success—in every respect, save one. He failed to unite the Communists with the Central government. He charges, in effect, that some of the career men obstructed this effort by encouraging the Communists to ask for too much. The counter-charge of at least some of the career men is that Hurley failed to put sufficient pressure on the generalissimo to offer reasonable terms. At least a few experienced China observers suspect, if they do not openly charge, that Chiang Kai-shek never has wanted an agreement with the Chinese Communists—that his objective is to liquidate them.

Hurley was backed by the State Department and White House in removing from his embassy staff the career men whom he regarded as unsympathetic to him. To what extent their disagreement was with the policy laid down by the White House, to what extent it was with Hurley's methods in dealing with the split between the Central government and the Communists, is not easy to determine.

Hurley's resignation sharpens two questions:

1. Whether some of the career men can be trusted to execute faithfully policies laid down by the White House and Secretary of State.

2. What steps the United States should take to avert, or stop, civil war in China.

The first merits close investigation. The second is much more intricate and yields no easy answer.

Shelter For Bus Riders

Last night I stood huddled—one of hundreds—shrinking, shriveled and freezing in a cold drizzle waiting for a bus to carry us to Virginia. The rain was running down my neck, a couple of umbrellas were dripping in my eyes, my feet were wet. Dozens of young girls with too few clothes on were drenched to the skin. There is no roof—no shelter—we stand in the middle of Pennsylvania ave. and shiver.

Now with the winter coming on it is not a bit too early for the District or the A. B. & W. Bus Co. to do something about it.

Conditions at this so-called terminal are far inferior to those at any point where "fat cattle" are shipped. Shippers know that fat cattle exposed to the weather will lose weight. Their resistance is lowered and they are apt to come down with "shipping fever" or pneumonia. And no shipper wants to lose money on his steers.

Are humans less important? The Government has an impossible job keeping workers on the job now without exposing them to illnesses that will cut down working time all winter. How about starting something, perhaps a terminal where all suburban buses "take on" and deposit those unfortunate enough to have to ride to work here.

LUTHER WOOLFORD.
Washington, Nov. 16.

Washington Calling

By Marquis Childs

Hurley's Blast Adds No Light

THE EASIEST WAY to dispose of your opposition, if you are not too sure of your arguments, is to yell Communist. That was what Patrick J. Hurley did when he resigned as American Ambassador to China.

His statement, which seems to have been issued without warning to either the State Department or the White House, had an angry, intemperate sound. It adds heat, but certainly no light to the obscure workings of our policy in China.

What makes Hurley's outburst more difficult to understand is the fact that in China he has had his own way almost entirely. Those same foreign service officers about whom he complains so bitterly were sent out of Chungking at his request. He would take no advice from them.

Hurley was sent to China by President Roosevelt, who hoped it would be possible to reconcile the two hostile factions—the Nationalist army under Chiang Kai-shek, and the Communists. The Communists had resisted the Japanese with less to fight with than even Chiang's beleaguered forces.

While these were Hurley's instructions, he seems to have swung quickly into the Nationalist orbit and increasingly resented the advice of younger men in the embassy who urged him to bargain with Chiang in order to try to bring the two factions together. Stubbornly holding to his own viewpoint, Hurley drew closer to Chiang, who was naturally gratified to find that he was not required to make major concessions to the other side.

AMONG THE YOUNGER diplomatic officers in our embassy in Chungking were some who knew China and the Far East from long experience and study. One was John Service, who was sent back to Washington where, subsequently, he was charged with giving out secret documents.

After being subjected to arrest and search under the most humiliating circumstances, Service was later cleared with an official apology from Secretary of State James F. Byrnes, who declared him guiltless. While former Undersecretary Joseph C. Grew was apparently responsible for the stupid blunder, the whole story of this cruel injustice has never been told.

After the formal apology, Service was reinstated with a higher rank and sent to Japan as an adviser to General MacArthur. Obviously, he is one of the diplomats about whom Hurley is complaining.

George Atcheson, also long familiar with China and the Far East, was sent home from Chungking. He, too, is now in Tokyo on MacArthur's staff.

Still another of these diplomats is John Davies, jr., who was transferred from Chungking to Moscow. Davies served for some time as liaison officer to Gen. Joseph Stilwell. Stilwell, who did such a magnificent job of training Chinese troops, was similarly exiled for his outspoken criticism of Chiang's policy.

The most conspicuous target of Hurley's blast is John Carter Vincent, a career diplomat with many years' experience in the Orient. Vincent served as counselor of the embassy under Clarence E. Gauss, who preceded Hurley as Ambassador to China.

Vincent, a conscientious public servant with an excellent record in the foreign service, was called back to Washington to be head of the China division of the State Department. It must have come as a great surprise to him to read in Hurley's statement that career diplomats were setting our China policy. Responsible officials in the department have been concerned because they felt they had been completey sidetracked on China.

THE POLICY was being set by Hurley and the War Department, with Gen. Albert C. Wedemeyer, commanding general in the theater, one of the most important figures. These men were convinced, as they have publicly stated, that we should use American arms to help restore China to Chiang Kai-shek.

There are many things wrong with the State Department, as this column has recently stressed. One of them is that too often, in shaping our policy, we ignore the advice of the expert career men who have real knowledge in their specialized fields.

Hurley's explosion has served no good purpose. General Marshall has again proved himself a patriot in accepting this extremely difficult assignment when the luxury of retirement was in his grasp.

The hope is that Marshall will be able to work with the State Department toward a reasonable solution of the Chinese puzzle. He is utterly lacking in vanity and vainglory, and that will give him an advantage to begin with.

Letters To The Editor

Communications must carry writer's name and address, though pen names are permitted at the editor's discretion. Letters should be held to not more than 300 words. They are subject to condensation.

Army Discharges

There are now thousands of men, a great majority with over 90 points, in the three staging areas around Manila who have been sweating out transportation in these depots for as much as 30 days and over. There are also additional thousands of high point men who can't even so much as get into the staging areas. Still they keep lowering the points which only allows more men in the States who have never been overseas to get discharged at our expense. Haven't we done our share? However, there is one bright aspect. The officers are doing O. K., as usual. Our particular unit is a prime example. All of our officers are gone, the majority of them having no more points than the average of the enlisted men in this unit.

We get the story every day "no transportation." Still Manila harbor is full of boats and they pull out every day with space that could carry troops. We read in Stateside papers that boats have been returned to private companies for civilian travel and that others are idle in East Coast river berths. Still your papers and the Army insist that troops are being redeployed rapidly. Shouldn't that sort of statement be qualified to the European theater as we see a great difference over here. We want the folks in the States to know the situation here. Only yesterday approximately 750 Chinamen were shipped back to China on a boat we could have used (these were civilians). Two weeks ago the hospital ship Mercy was in Manila harbor slated to return Japanese who were waiting on the dock. The ship's personnel protested so strongly that the Japs were returned to their encampment and GIs were put aboard.

As glib as this may sound, this is not the personal gripe of a disgruntled few who have signed this letter. It is a small whisper compared to the roar of the thousands of men in the staging areas now, the very few who have gone before and the additional thousands who are still farther behind.

25 SIGNATURES.
Manila, P. I., Nov. 12.

During the 4½ months from VE-Day to the end of September, the Army discharged about one million men. Now, however, the separation centers and points are discharging only 30 to 50 per cent of the men they were a month ago (except in the Air Forces which only began their discharge program recently). And this is true despite the fact that there are thousands of men in the Army who are simply standing by until the point, age or service figures are lowered and they can be discharged.

No one wants any more men than necessary in our armies of occupation and everyone wants our high-point men discharged as soon as possible. But professional Army apologists are trying to explain away the detention of such men overseas. So, suffice it to say that high-point men should be given preference immediately upon their return. Meanwhile, why not get our backlog of idle men on this side out? Those with overseas service earned their points the hard way; those with only continental service had no choice in the matter.

I am a Brazilian and only a businessman on a business trip, having arrived in Washington yesterday. I am not and never have been politically connected in any way in Brazil. I note in The Post of November 28 Mr. Sumner Welles' article entitled "Anti-American Feeling." The ideas concerning Brazil as conveyed in that article are positively incorrect. There is no wave of anti-American feeling in Brazil. On the contrary, Brazilian people feel right now that we are much more in tune with the United States than we have been in some previous recent years. If American and Brazilian people are kept fully informed, there need not be a speedy disintegration of our century-old ties, but rather a strengthening of those ties, both in official and private fields. Mr. Welles would do the Brazilian people a great favor by modifying his views of Brazilian feeling toward this great country.

Rat Control

J. D. Mansfield's letter on November 26 regarding the disgraceful rat situation in the District has given me the necessary impetus to write a letter I have wanted to send for several years.

One sits but for a short time in either Scott or DuPont Circle before one sees several generations of rats, not only darting in and out of the shrubbery, but running about on the grass and sidewalks.

Introduction of lethal gas into the rats' holes, under the supervision of health authorities, would rapidly decrease this menace and earn for the city authorities the sincere thanks of many city-bound mothers who have no other nearby places to seek health and sunshine for their children.

Refuge In Ethiopia

On October 30, 1945, at the third session of the New York Herald-Tribune Forum, a message from H. M. Haile Selassie, Emperor of Ethiopia, was read. I call attention to these significant words:

"One of the most serious problems of today is that of the homeless and displaced families. Ethiopia has afforded refuge to many homeless from southern Europe, particularly from Greece, and is prepared to continue her contribution."

Here is clear indication of Ethiopia's noble readiness to admit a considerable number of displaced persons from Europe. May I suggest careful inquiry by those interested in rescue of Jews from disease and death.

Hurley's Charges

By Mark Sullivan

Our Policy In China

THE OUTCRY of Gen. Patrick J. Hurley, until this week Ambassador to China, covered substantially the whole of our foreign relations—our policies about Russia, Britain, China, the United Nations; and the administration of these policies, both by our Ambassadors abroad and internally within the State Department. Within so large a field are many problems. One among them, China, which General Hurley emphasized, lends itself to comparatively simple statements. It is to China that the very capable Gen. George C. Marshall is being sent.

When we were drawn into the war, China was divided. There was a central government, headed by Chiang Kai-shek, covering much the larger part of the country and embracing much the larger part of the population. A dissident group consisted of Communists. Both groups fought the Japanese. The Communists demanded that we provide them with arms, the same as Chiang Kai-shek, and that we otherwise treat them on a basis of equality.

TO HANDLE the problems thus presented, and in general to try to bring about cooperation between the Communists and the central government, President Roosevelt sent General Hurley to China.

As to the demands for arms from us, General Hurley took the ground that on the broadest principles we could not give arms to a dissident group within a nation that was our ally. Further, it was clear that a gift of arms by us to the Communists, however it might help the Communists to fight Japan, would have a deadly effect of discouraging the central government, which was our main reliance. To keep the central government and its armed forces alive was our constant and extreme anxiety. This course by General Hurley accorded with the specific and direct instructions he had received from President Roosevelt.

After the war against Japan was won, the cleavage in China continued. What to do about it is our present problem. It is determinable by whatever is to be our future interest and policy about the Far East, especially China and Japan.

We fought the war to resist an aggression by Japan. Our principle future interest is to keep Japan incapable of another such aggression. We think of this as our responsibility, alone. But a strong and united China is a better assurance of keeping Japan down than large American forces kept in the Far East indefinitely.

IN CHINA the Communists and the central government continue to battle. What to do about this is our immediate problem. For us the answer is the same, it is to have a strong and united China. This cannot be, so long as there are within China's territory two governments with two armies. Diplomatically our task is to bring the two governments together. If that cannot be, we are led by our self-interest and bound by our pledged word to support the central government.

The situation brings up an immediate problem. In the territory covered by the Communist government are American troops. They went there to aid in receiving the surrender of the Japanese. The Communists demand that we withdraw them. This demand has some support in our own country. Some of this support is motivated by the simple wish to get our soldiers home, to end involvement in foreign disputes. Some of this no doubt comes from sympathy with the Communists.

We want to bring about an orderly and peaceful world, everywhere. To that end we keep troops in Germany, and assume we may have to keep them there for decades.

The fact that Germany was a conquered country does not, in its bearing on the broad problem, make it different from China as an allied country. Without a unified China, there cannot be order in that country nor elsewhere in the Far East. If the attainment of a unified China and an orderly world will be furthered by presence of our troops in that country until order is restored, our world purpose calls for us to keep them there.

'Inconsistent'

It is difficult to credit the statement by "Army Wife," in a letter printed in your issue of November 20, that Negro reporters are excluded from the press gallery of the House of Representatives. With a little checking, however, I have found that this is indeed the case. According to my informant, the Congressional Press Association, which bars Negroes from membership, enjoys exclusive rights to the privileges of the press gallery, while nonmembers must use the less convenient public galleries.

While it is perfectly proper for private individuals to form associations with membership restrictions, I fail to see that such a private group is entitled to preempt any portion of our public buildings, and especially of the Capitol, for the use of its members exclusively. Moreover, when the lines are drawn in terms of ancestry, such practices in the Capital of this Nation are particularly repugnant to self-respecting citizens.

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

Mass Firings Delayed By State Department

STATE yesterday called off temporarily its mass firing of employes in the old offices of War Information, Inter-American Affairs, International Information, and Cultural Cooperation. Pierce MacCoy, the personnel director, who revealed the change in plans, explained that it had been decided yesterday to keep all employes on the rolls for at least another month until Congress agrees on how much money the department will have for its new Office of International Information and Cultural Affairs. At stake is $5,000,000 to continue some of the functions of the old Office of War Information. The department had planned to give out dismissal notices today to upward of 3500 war service and temporary employes in these four offices. MacCoy said the employes, instead would be notified today that the dismissal order had been withdrawn for the time being.

KLUTTZ

PLANS also have been revised for the Washington office and it will be somewhat larger than had been anticipated, provided, of course, the department gets the five million dollars. Paper plans called for a staff of 500 here in the new Office of International Information and Cultural Relations, which is to be set up on January 1 by a merger of the four information divisions. Yesterday, however, it was agreed to keep a staff of 859 employes in that office here, 644 in the office proper and 215 in administrative and service work. A few of the radio and press and publications employes will be transferred to the New York office. The United Federal Workers of America has urged the department to give 90-day notices to employes who are to be laid off. Also it has asked that a register be established to give employes who are furloughed reemployment rights when vacancies occur. State employes who are slated for dismissal argue that the personnel cutback should be made solely from OWI and OIAA employes.

WLB: This agency is faced with similar troubles. The labor disputes work of the War Labor Board will fade out of existence along with the board itself on January 1 and the employes engaged in this work will be given dismissal notices within a few days. Only the wage stabilization unit of WLB will be continued and it until June 30. Late yesterday the agency was unable to say definitely how many of the employes would be laid off and how many would be kept. At one time the board had 2600 employes but it is now down to 1600. It's estimated that about 1000 are engaged in disputes work and 600 in wage stabilization. But the WLB has money troubles with Congress, too, and an official explained yesterday that those employes who do not get pink slips within the next few days will not be certain of their jobs until June 30. The stabilization division prevents hourly wage cuts and it recommends price increases to offset increases in wages.

PAY BILL: With the Senate in an all-out debate on foreign policy, Chairman Downey of the Senate Civil Service Committee, has about given up hope of getting action this week on his bill that would raise salaries of white-collar Federal employes by 20 per cent. He hopes to call it up Monday. This delay of a week darkens the outlook for favorable Senate action. The Senate is anxious to adjourn and its members are tied up on all sorts of investigations. All this means that action may be postponed until next year. But Chairman Downey hasn't given up hope and he will push for an early vote.

DIARY NOTES: A 40-hour week for Veterans' Administration employes here is slated for January 1. VA is the only large agency whose employes have been kept on a minimum 5½-day schedule. . . . A record number of more that 32,000 veterans, wives of disabled veterans and widows of veterans were given Federal jobs during October. Since January 1, 189,830 veteran placement have been made in Government. . . . Chairman Burch of the House Postoffice Committee is drafting a bill to raise the salaries of the 375,000 postal workers. . . . President Truman has gotten word to Senator Wagner that he supports his housing bill. Senators Ellender and Taft are cosponsors of the legislation. The bill calls for aids to private industry, slum clearance, a research unit and a permanent national housing agency.

COAST GUARD: It will reduce its staff here to 1269 by June. In September it had on duty here 510 officers, 247 enlisted men, 311 Spars, and 833 civilians, a total of 2461. By June 30 it plans to be down to 912 civilians, 190 officers, and 30 enlisted men. All Spars will be either discharged or assigned to duties elsewhere. A few more civilians will be added to replace military personnel . . . MARINES: It will have a corresponding reduction of its military personnel during the same period. No lay-offs are planned among its 760 civilians at headquarters here . . . TREASURY is still recruiting experienced accountants and investigators to run down tax dodgers for its Bureau of Internal Revenue . . . NAVY: will scrap these battleships: The New York, Nevada, Mississippi, Pennsylvania, Arkansas and the Texas.

Saunders Gets Five Years in Marine Killing

Manassas, Va., Nov. 29 (AP).—Forty-five-year-old Raymond Saunders of Quantico was convicted of involuntary manslaughter in the death of his former marine houseboat mate, John Brad Ellison, 16-years-old, at the close of a two-day trial in Prince William County Circuit Cpurt here this afternoon, and was sentenced to five years in the penitentiary by Judge Paul E. Brown.

A story of a quarrel over a card game, a fight and a killing, and the disposal of Ellison's body in a deserted well was reconstructed by the prosecution. Saunders plead innocent.

Bones Found in Well

Saunders was arrested in September after bones and personal effects were found in a well on the old Jennings property by Laurence Kilby, who had purchased the long-vacant house and property. He was indicted for murder of Ellison October 2.

Robert Leitch, a prosecution witness, testified that he knew Ellison and that on the night of December 29, 1929, Saunders had shown him blood spots in the snow near his car on the bank of the creek, and had told him that he and Ellison had quarreled over the 24-year-old former Marine's accusation that Saunders had cheated him in a card game.

"I've put him where he won't bother me any more," Leitch quoted Saunders as telling him.

Only defense witness today, brought by Saunders' counsel, was Howard Stevens, Quantico druggist, who testified that he had treated Saunders for a hand cut.

Disappearance Recalled

In his own testimony, Saunders said that he had cut his hand cranking his car, and had dripped blood on the snow near the car, and that the blood spots Leitch saw came from his hand wound.

Saunders said the night of the twenty-ninth in 1929 he was returning to his houseboat on the creek, and saw, 40 feet away, a body lying in the snow, clad in blue overalls, and that he did not examine or touch it, but went on to his boat.

Other witnesses recalled that Saunders had left Quantico for about a month after Ellison's disappearance, and had gone to Stafford County.

The bones and belongings in the well were identified as those of Ellison, partly by the testimony of Dr. Woodrow Earl Payne, Arlington dentist, who said the dentures exhibited were the same as the dentures on Ellison's old Marine chart. Ellison had been dishonorably discharged from the Marines before he came to Quantico. His home was Sharps Chapel, Tenn.

Dr. Daly Stewart Smithsonian Institute anthropologist, said the bones were those of a man the same height as witnesses ascribed to Ellison, an dthose of a man between 25 and 29 years old.

Hawes P. Davies of Manassas, was Saunders' attorney.

Maryland Airlines To Use Unlicensed Easton Airport

Baltimore, Nov. 29 (AP).—The Maryland Airlines, Inc., has announced its intention to use the Easton Municipal Airport despite the State Aviation Commission's refusal to license the field.

Charles H. Buck, chairman of the commission, witheld comment on the airline' action pending a conference with the attorney general's office.

The commission last week rejected an application for a Class 3 license for the Easton airport on the ground that it lacked adequate facilities to serve the convenience and safety of air travelers.

Maryland Airlines since last summer has operated two no-scheduled round-trip flights daily between Washington and Easton. Traffic manager of the company, James E. Ryon, said today the airline proposed to continue these flights despite the commission's order.

Bids Far Exceed Estimates on State Building Projects

Baltimore, Nov. 29 (AP).—The size of the bids prompted the State Board of Public Works yesterday to defer action on several proposed construction projects.

Joseph McCusker, chief deputy State comptroller and secretary of the board, said the group had decided to take no action on remodeling the State tobacco warehouse in Baltimore. He explained the original estimate of the work was $86,000 and the lowest bid, $176,468.

McCusker added that further discussions are planned with administrative heads at Springfield State Hospital for Insane at Sykesville and the Spring Grove State Hospital at Catonsville before deciding what to do about proposed improvements at those institutions.

18 GI Patients Wed In 2 Months at Pickett

Camp Pickett, Va., Nov. 29 (Spl.). Dan Cupid has invaded Camp Pickett General Hospital wards to bring 18 marriages in two month, with a high last week when three couples were wed in the hospital chapel.

The marriages, most of them uniting nurses and patients who met during treatment here for wounds received overseas, have reached a grand total of 46 since the hospital opened eight months ago.

The injuries which led to the marriages have brought together persons from all parts of the country, but one case led to a romance between two Pennsylvanians who had never met even though their homes are only 50 miles apart.

10-Inch Snow Covers Part of Western Md.

By the Associated Press

Clearing weather was forecast for all sections of Maryland today, although the Sixth District headquarters of the State Roads Commission reported that 10 inches of snow yesterday covered a section of western Maryland between Frostburg and Keyser's Ridge.

A freak snowstorm swirling between Big and Little Savage Mountains brought the unusual snowfall, the roads headquarters said.

Snow plows were out Wednesday and Thursday in mountainous Allegany County. Three inches of snow fell early yesterday on top of the 7-inch fall of Wednesday.

In Washington County, where 1.70 inches of rain fell in the last 24 hours, small streams were out of their banks. Around noon yesterday, the Potomac River was rising at the rate of two tenths of an inch per hour.

However, the United States Weather Bureau said that all of the State would have fair and cool weather today, with rain ending in the eastern and central parts of the State. A light snow in the mountains in Allegany County also was predicted by the Weather Bureau.

7c-an-Hour Raise In Pay Is Granted Va. Transit Union

Richmond, Va., Nov. 29 (AP). Transit employes in Richmond, Norfolk and Portsmouth will get a seven-cent-an-hour raise, retroactive to June 7, 1945, under terms of a new contract signed here yesterday by representatives of the Virginia Transit Co., Portsmouth Transit Co. and the Amalgamated Association of Street, Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employes of America (AFL).

Besides the wage increases, the contract effective January 1 grants a union shop with the check-off system for union dues collection, and two weeks vacation after one year of continuous service.

Bus and streetcar operators and employes of the shop, maintenance of way and line departments will get the seven-cent increase.

Baltimore and State Lag in 'E' Bond Sales

Baltimore, Nov. 29 (AP).—The War Finance Committee said today that approximately 75 per cent of Baltimore's $17,000,000 "E" bond quota still had to be met with only nine days of the Victory Loan Drive remaining.

Only $4,300,000 in "E" bond sales have been recorded in the city, the committee said.

Figures supplied by the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond showed Maryland counties running ahead of Baltimore in "E" sales. Total Maryland sales stood at $9,000,000, or 31 per cent of the over-all $28,000,000 State quota.

Sugar Coupon 342 Will Expire Today

Richmond, Va., Nov. 29 (AP).—Holders of the special five-pound sugar coupon No. 342 issued for home canning purposes by the OPA at the beginning of the canning season were reminded today that Friday is the last day on which the special ration can be claimed.

The 342 coupon was issued by the OPA in exchange for No. 13 spare.

At the same time, the OPA said that the one-pound certificate No. 330, revised, continued valid, although the old 330 is no longer good.

Va. Auto Revenues Increase Despite Drop in Registrations

Richmond, Va., Nov. 29 (AP).—Virginia's motor vehicle revenues in the fiscal year 1944-45 showed a 5.2 per cent gain over the previous year despite wartime conditions, C. F. Joyner, jr., commissioner of motor vehicles, disclosed today in a report to Governor Darden.

The revenues from all sources totaled $26,708,466 compared with $25,365,169 in 1943-44 and $25,902,102 in 1942-43.

Gas Revenues Gain

Gas tax revenues the past year amounted to $18,429,460, an increase of 5.2 per cent over the previous year, which reflected, Joyner said, "the stringent rationing of this commodity for the first year and gradual relaxation of conservation measures for the second year." Receipts from operators' licenses jumped to $273,763, an increase of 188.7 per cent, in 1944-45, attributable to the fact that this is the tri-year renewal period. Automobile receipts climbed 3.4 per cent to $7,787,604, and other receipts advanced 8.7 per cent.

During the first six months of 1945 motor vehicle registrations totaled 509,334, considerably under the 567,352 recorded in 1944.

The commissioner proposed in recommendations submitted to the Governor that a modern building in the center of a city block, to afford ample parking space, be erected for the division. This, he said, would permit use of the present structure at Twelfth and Main sts. by other smaller State agencies and relieve his own division of cramped quarters.

More Time for Filing

Other recommendations proposed amendments to the new State motor vehicle safety responsibility act extending the time for filing written accident reports from 24 hours to five days, and authorizing the division to exercise "reasonable discretion" in applying section 32 of the act "when it appears that persons involved in accidents are plainly not guilty of negligence to the end that such innocent persons not be deprived of their privileges pending the adjudication of their case by the courts or pending their securing of releases from persons who were guilty of negligence in respect to the accident."

Va. Rate Cut On Auto Risks Is Approved

Richmond, Va., Nov. 29 (AP).—The State Corporation Commission approved today a revision of automobile liability insurance rates which the carriers estimate will result in lower rates for approximately 80 per cent of the State's motorists.

The new rates provide for three classifications of automobiles, as follows:

A-1, for autos driven less than 7500 miles a year by persons 25 years old or older; A, for cars used for business purposes and driven more than 7500 miles a year by persons at least 25 years of age, and B classification for other automobiles used in business. It was estimated that those falling in A-1 category would pay 14.5 per cent less, those in A 2.2 per cent less, and those in B, 22 per cent more than at present.

The revision will be effective on policies written on and after January 1, 1946. The new program was advanced by 47 stock and mutual insurance companies writing liability insurance covering property damage and bodily injury for motorists in Virginia. While many drivers will have reduced rates, the over-all premium payments for this insurance in the State was estimated at approximately the same as at present, $3,300,000 a year.

10 Arraigned In $435,660 Bank Fraud

Richmond, Va., Nov. 29 (AP).—Federal Judge Robert J. Pollard of Federal District Court today set December 19 as the last day for filing of pleadings by William Reeves Gardner, Fredericksburg banker charged with misapplication of $435,660 in bank funds and by the nine others charged with aiding and abetting in the alleged fraud, when they were arraigned before him today.

Separate trials for Paul Karsten, jr. and D. E. Nelson, other defendants, may be asked by their attorneys, they indicated today.

Attorneys for all the defendants today joined in a motion to delay the entering of pleadings. Judge Pollard assured Gardner that "you will not be hurried into a trial."

Other defendants are Delegate Joseph Edwin Proffit of Floyd County, president of the Floyd County Bank; Hugh Namon Rakes of Leesburg, operator of 14 dairies in Virginia and 10 in Wisconsin; his wife, Lillian Conner Rakes; Clarence L. Robery, president of the National Bank of Purcellville in Loudoun County; Cashier Joseph A. Sowers in the Floyd County Bank; Kyle M. Weeks, attorney and law partner of Proffit, Harry Lamson, Washington realtor.

Gardner and Karsten are former vice presidents of the Fredericksburg bank. Nelson is a retired Roanoke real estate man.

Gardner is now serving a seven-year sentence in the State Penitentiary for embezzling $75,000 from the bank accounts of the Embassy Dairy Co. of Washington and the Green Springs Dairy Co. of Baltimore. He is a former director of both companies.

Other nine defendants have been free on bonds totalling $105,000 after their arrests here, in Roanoke and Alexandria.

Rake's bond of $25,000 was set by Judge Pollard after a recommendation from Assistant U. S. District Attorney George R. Humrickhouse who said Rakes and Gardner were principal offenders in the case.

Constable Floyd Slaying Remains Unsolved in Md.

Frederick, Md., Nov. 29 (Spl.).—Moving their dossier in the John B. Lloyd murder case investigation from the current files to that tabbed "murder unsolved," the State police today gave a review of their extensive investigation since the late Brunswick constable was the victim of a shotgun blast as he sat in his living room late last April 27.

The record was moved alongside that of the county's only other unsolved, modern murder case—the David M. Crist slaying at Walkersville over 20 years ago.

The records show that more than 150 persons were questioned during the course of the investigation by State police, sheriff's officers, FBI agents, Baltimore police, West Virginia State police and Texas Rangers. Every remote clew was followed.

Despite a $1000 reward offered by the county and wide publicity, officials said after seven months that the case will never be closed, but the investigation is stalled pending any further developments.

Norfolk Ferry Service Expanded

Norfolk, Va., Nov. 29 (AP).—Ferries between Newport News and the Pine Beach terminal at the naval base in Norfolk last night began operations until 1:20 a. m., the Chesapeake Ferry Co. today announced.

The additional service was announced following many protests after the schedule was curtailed recently to end service at 10:30 p. m. The expansion, however, does not apply to the Willoughby-Old Point service, which ceases at 10:30 p. m.

The ferries were recently closed down for three weeks during a strike by masters, mates and pilots for a change in working hours. When this was settled service was resumed on a curtailed basis, eliminating the late boats and causing many protests.

Magruder Reports $279 Spent on Campaign

Richmond, Va., Nov. 29 (AP).—J. Maynard Magruder, member of the House of Delegates from Arlington County, reported to the secretary of the Commonwealth today campaign expenses of $279.75.

W. R. Shafer, of Shenandoah County, reported $4 and expenses for newspaper advertising. The following three members reported no expenses: L. Lake Triplett, Fauquier County; E. T. Humphries, South Norfolk, and W. H. W. Cassell, Portsmouth.

City Use of USO Asked

Fredericksburg, Va., Nov. 29 (Spl.).—Acquisition of the USO Club here by the city for use as a recreation center for the community's youth was favored in a resolution adopted by the Youth Council last night. It is expected that the USO will be discontinued in the not-distant future.

Lady Astor's Nephew Loses Damage Suit

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 29 (Spl.).—An Albemarle County Circuit Court jury has returned verdicts awarding $586.95 in suits brought by Capt. C. Stewart Patterson of near Scottsville, his wife and his sister-in-law against C. D. Langhorne, nephew of Lady Astor, charging personal and property damages suffered as a result of assaults by Langhorne in the Patterson home on the night of last May 19-20.

Captain Patterson had asked $2500 for physical injuries plus damages to his clothes and the front door and screen to his home, while Mrs. Grace S. Patterson, his wife, and Miss Kitty B. Hodge, his sister-in-law, asked $500 each for physical injuries and damage to their clothes.

The jury awarded Captain Patterson $500 for personal injuries, plus $54.40 for property damage, and Mrs. Paterson $15 and her sister $17.95 for property damages.

Mrs. Patterson allegedly was first slapped and her husband was assaulted when he came to her aid. Miss Hodge allegedly was pushed to the floor in the melee.

Mr. Langhorne testified he had been drinking at the time and said he did not recall the assaults.

4 State Homes Urged in Place Of Almshouses

Richmond, Va., Nov. 29 (AP).—Commissioner May Q. Hawkins of the State Department of Welfare today recommended that four District homes for the indigent and all city homes be operated as a State system under direction of local welfare boards, and that county almshouses and poor farms be abolished and modern District infirmaries substituted for them.

These recommendations, and others on care of the indigent in homes, were made in Miss Hankin's annual report on almshouses, city homes and District homes.

Her recommendations included a plan for the State to assist localities in planning and financing care of the chronically ill and indigent who are not ill enough for hospitalization but not well enough for homes.

District homes at Manassas, Waynesboro, Chatham and Dublin, operated for the indigent by 25 localities, with all city homes in the State, should be placed under a State system, the report urged.

In the fiscal year ended June 30, 1945, more than 3000 people were cared for in 38 homes at a cost of $500,000, paid by localities.

District homes instead of county poor farms and almshouses would be "a step in the right direction" and improvement on the local institutions now operated largely in northern and southwest Virginia, Miss Hawkins said.

Va. Schools to Get More Visual Aids

Richmond, Va., Nov. 29 (AP).—Virginia schools soon will have a lot more movies, pictures, maps, globes and other sight and sound aids to help sugarcoat the learning process over the State.

The State Department of Education has ordered $603,629 worth of "materials for Virginia's audio-visual educational program," announced Dr. Labney S. Lancaster, superintendent of public instruction, today. And when it comes it will be a bargain, he added, as discounts are bringing the figure down to $427,373.77.

Seed Supply Held Ample Despite Baltimore Fire

Richmond, Va., Nov. 29 (AP).—General Manager W. G. Wysor, of the Southern States Cooperative, said today that members of the organization still have a large supply of hybrid corn and other seeds to meet requirements for producing next year's crop.

The cooperative's seed cleaning and hybrid corn processing plant in Baltimore burned to the ground Sunday. Wysor said that the loss, estimated at $700,000, was fully covered by insurance.

Frederick, Md., Nov. 29 (Spl.). Funeral services will be held in Thurmont Friday afternoon for Charles Ellsworth Cassell, jr., former editor of the Catoctin Clarion at Thurmont, and long prominent in musical and fraternal circles in Frederick County, who died yesterday in Baltimore at the age of 68.

A son of the late Charles E. and Julia Catherine Foreman Cassell, he was a member of the Reformed Church, Acacia Lodge, A. F. and A. Masons of Thurmont, and for many years led the Masonic quartet. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Janet S. Freeman Cassell;; a daughter, Mrs. Stanley E. Kurtz, Philadelphia, and three sisters.

George F. Eckenrode

Frederick, Md., Nov. 29.—Requiem mass will be read at St. Anthony's Church, near Emmitsburg, Friday morning for George F. Eckenrode, well known retired farmer, who died in a Baltimore hospital at the age of 70. He was a charter member of Brute Council, Knights of Columbus, of Emmitsburg, and was prominently identified with the Holy Name Society. Survivors include a brother, Msgr. John R. Eckenrode, pastor of St. Mary's Church, Baltimore; four sisters, the Misses Mary G., Anna I., Louise S. and Martha R. Eckenrode, all at home.

Anney L. Marrs

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 29.—Funeral rites for Arney Lee Marrs, 69, Albemarle County farmer, who died at the University Hospital, were held here this afternoon. He married Miss Laura E. Hoard of this county, who survives, with three sons and five daughters, Pfc. Russell J. Marrs, USA; Pvt. Edward B. Marrs, USA; Lankford C. Marrs, Bassett; Mrs. W. P. Marrs of this city; Mrs. Dorothy Walton and Misses Ethel M. and Ollie Marrs of Albemarle, and Mrs. Virginia Walton of Alexandria.

Mrs. Eva G. Ready

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 29.—The funeral of Mrs. Eva Garnett Ready, who died at a local nursing home, was held this afternoon in Richmond. Mrs. Ready, widow of W. J. Ready, had recently resigned her post as house mother at the Virginia Baptist Orphange at Salem after a service of 19 years. Surviving are one son, Robert R. Ready, and the following stepchildren: Mrs. J. B. Watkins, Midlothian; George E. Ready, Greensboro, N. C., and Mrs. Walter Crenshaw and John B. Ready, both of Richmond.

Miss Ruth J. Fansler

Martinsburg, W. Va., Nov. 29.—Services will be held here tomorrow for Miss Ruth J. Fansler, 51, businesswoman and church worker, who died at the home of a sister, Mrs. William A. Fulk, Baltimore, yesterday. Surviving are two sisters and three brothers.

Rapist Gets 30 Years

Fredericksburg, Va., Nov. 29.—(Spl.).—Walter Crawford, 24-year-old Negro laborer of Weedonville, was sentenced to 30 years in prison for rape by a jury in King George County Circuit Court yesterday. The offense was committed against a 31-year-old Negro woman early in the morning of August 25 off a road near the woman's home at Owens.

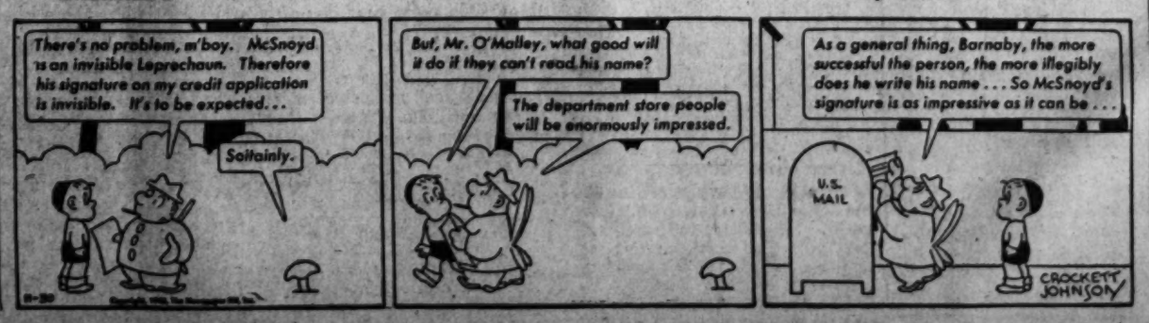
HARPER & BROTHERS

BARNABY

By Crockett Johnson



There's no problem, m'boy. McSnoyd is an invisible Leprechaun. Therefore his signature on my credit application is invisible. It's to be expected...
Soitainly.
But, Mr. O'Malley, what good will it do if they can't read his name?
The department store people will be enormously impressed.
As a general thing, Barnaby, the more successful the person, the more illegibly does he write his name... So McSnoyd's signature is as impressive as it can be...

Learn Home Nursing

One Yugoslavian and five Latin American Red Cross representatives arrived here this week to take a course in home nursing in preparation of starting similar courses in their own countries.

The class will be conducted with the aid of interpreters.

Pet Priority

Blaze's Bite Sends Fala To Hospital

Rhinebeck, N. Y., Nov. 29 (AP).—That former White House favorite, Fala, was a surgical case in a dog hospital today, his usual photogenic appearance marred by deep slashes received in a fight with Elliott Roosevelt's bull mastiff, Blaze.

Fala, the little Scottie who was the late President Roosevelt's pet, was admitted to Dr. Thomas Sheldon's hospital last Saturday. Several stitches were required to close his wounds and he was weak from loss of blood.

The middle-aged Fala, who became the father of two pups last March, was a visitor at the Roosevelt family's Hyde Park estate on Saturday. He had been living with Miss Margaret Suckley, a cousin of the late President, in Rhinebeck.

While ambling across a lawn Fala met the 135-pound Blaze. One growl led to another and soon the fur began to fly—from Fala. Blaze was uninjured.

The big mastiff made headlines last January when three servicemen were "bumped off" a plane because they did not have as high a travel priority as did the dog.

Blaze then was en route to Elliott Roosevelt's wife, Actress Faye Emerson.

Fala's condition today was reported as good. He will be sent home Sunday as a convalescent.

17 From District To Be Inducted

Seventeen District men are to be inducted today.

Delmar E. Cooper, Ralph W. Jennings, Eugene A. Marquardt, Thomas C. Martin, Earl H. Sisk, jr., Harold H. Gore, William B. Riley, Lonnie N. Alston, William X. Brown, Howard F. Clements, jr., Carl F. Dabbs, Richard D. Grymes, Calvin C. Henderson, William E. Phillips, Morrice E. Queen, Arthur A. Letrud and John J. Negri.

Commissioners to Act in Teamsters' Strike

The District Commissioners yesterday promised to step into the 37-day-old strike of 250 teamsters here, which already has tied up more than a million and a half dollars in Christmas merchandise, leaving some stores 20 to 30 per cent short.

Meanwhile, complaints were received from veterans discharged at nearby separation centers that the strike of 4000 Greyhound bus drivers which entered its fourth week yesterday was interfering with their return home.

No prospects of an early settlement of the bus strike were in view, but J. Monroe Johnson, director of the Office of Defense Transportation, said the situation had not reached a stage where seizure action was warranted.

Conference Planned Today

The Commissioners arranged a conference for 11 a. m. today with United States Conciliator Richard W. Goodrick, who has been trying for weeks to bring truck disputants together.

The meeting was called following receipt of a telegram from the Federation of Businessmen's Association here "urgently" requesting "immediate assistance" by the Commissioners to end the walkout. At least 800 carloads of merchandise have been stalled in railroad yards because of the strike, the Commissioners said Goodrick told them.

Still in effect is a strike-produced embargo on all less-than-carload railroad shipments coming into the District. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroads, until this week the only line accepting shipments into Washington, was forced to place an embargo on incoming merchandise because of an overflow of business usually going to other lines.

Arbitration Discussed

Arbitration of the wage dispute has been under consideration by Local 639, AFL Teamsters International Union, and the 11 strike-bound trucking firms for several weeks, it was learned. The disputants have been unable, however, to agree on what issues would be submitted to arbitration.

Army personnel being discharged from Fort Meade, Md., and the AAF Separation Center at Andrews Field are those most concerned by the Greyhound tie-up. Dischargees are being given 5 cents a mile travel pay, according to Brig. Gen. Charles G. Helmick, Fort Meade commander, and permitted to find their own way to get home. "My guess is that most of them who live in communities served only by Greyhound hitch-hike," he said.

Union Officials Meet

Union officials directing the strike have been meeting for two days in Indianapolis. The conferees included officials of the unions on strike in the six Greyhound lines operating east of the Mississippi River.

Labor Department conciliators who attempted to reach a settlement of the Greyhound dispute when the strike was first called were standing by in Washington yesterday. "We are willing to take part again as soon as company officials show a disposition to renew negotiations," Labor Commissioner Martin J. O'Connell said.

NOW 15,000 UNITS VITAMIN A

No Wonder It's So Good For Children

Now this extra goodness of Mrs. Filbert's has the added NUTRITION of 15,000 Units Vitamin A in every pound.

After school, millions of children love bread with Mrs. Filbert's—they like it for the same reason their Mothers buy it—because it is so different—so sweet and fresh in flavor—and so unlike ordinary war-time margarine.

Mrs. Filbert has spent nearly a lifetime making her margarine so good millions now prefer it. And to her woman's idea of a different margarine has been added a number of original and exclusive manufacturing improvements.

Just recently, 15,000 Units Vitamin A were added to each pound of Mrs. Filbert's which means it now has the fresh taste—the food energy—the digestibility and vitamin content without any summer and winter variation.

And Mrs. Filbert believes if you try her margarine, you'll be able to tell, too, that her business grew because her margarine is so much better that you will actually prefer it for eating, cooking, frying and baking to ANYTHING you ever tasted on bread or on vegetables, or for cakes and pies. Post Bible Verses

Portions of James I

James, a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad, greeting.

My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations: knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience. But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing.

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think he shall receive any thing of the Lord.

A double minded man is unstable in all his ways.

Let the brother of low degree rejoice in that he is exalted; but the rich, in that he is made low; because as the flower of the grass he shall pass away.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

IT HAS NOW BECOME fashionable in some quarters to get out the dead cats and sling them in the direction of the White House. Some of the ivory-tower columnists are limbering up their arms. Some of then newspapers, hitherto gentle, have taken off the gloves. In other words, the honeymoon is definitely over—and no one knows it better than Truman himself.

However, the Truman Administration marriage has got to last three more years, and there is no use brandishing the rolling pin or waving the skillet unless it gets us somewhere. Instead, let's take an unbiased look at the man who didn't want to be President—his mistakes, his qualities, his achievements.

In the first place, you can chalk up two definite accomplishments for Truman: (1) He has appointed a better Cabinet than Roosevelt, and (2) he has carried on Roosevelt policies unflinchingly.

The latter, of course, will not be considered much of an achievement by Republicans or many Southern Democrats. However, Truman was elected on a Roosevelt ticket, pledged his word to continue the Roosevelt program and has lived up to his word.

Truman Sticks Chin Out

IN FACT, HE HAS shown more courage than FDR in many things. For instance, the late President had been urged to recommend a broad national health program, but he always side-stepped. Truman has now sent a message to Congress urging what Roosevelt balked at doing. Again when it came to the FEPC, FDR ducked at too openly offending Southern Congressmen and let others carry the ball. But Truman stuck his chin out by writing a letter to the Rules Committee urging immediate action. Roosevelt never wrote a letter to the Rules Committee during all his 12 long years in office.

Truman has been equally forthright in regard to full employment, unemployment compensation, antitrust suits, and offending his own friends by tackling the question of submerged oil. Roosevelt, though officially committed to this program, sometimes ducked. Truman not only hasn't ducked, he has led with his chin. And whether you agree with him or not, you can't help admire his courage.

Republicans who don't like the Truman-Roosevelt policies will agree that taken man for man, his Cabinet far surpasses Roosevelt's in ability, political acumen and general stature. Why, then, has he failed to get off the ground, while his predecessor, working with less able men and the same program, kept in the air?

Four Truman Troubles

THE ANSWER LIES in four general reasons.

1. Roosevelt had the gift of going on the radio and swaying the public over the heads of Congress. Truman lacks the radio technique, the theatrics, the ability to make that appeal. He is just as sincere as Roosevelt—perhaps more so. He is desperately trying to do a good job. But he can't whip Congress into line by mobilizing public opinion. That was the most powerful weapon Roosevelt had.

2. Truman has been seriously wounded by the very group he has consistently sought to help—labor. Unauthorized strikes, such as the Washington transit strike and the Nation-wide vote walkout of telephone workers convinced many people that Truman-Roosevelt polices of aiding labor had gone too far. All the strikes have hurt Truman politically, but the wildcat strikes especially have ruined Truman's hand when it comes to social legislation and is bound to have its effect on the next election.

Dewey Was Right

3. TRUMAN HAS LET himself be dominated by the military when it comes to conscription, the garbled discharge of veterans and the use of ships for bringing men home. Politically he has played right into the hands of Governor Dewey who in the campaign of 1944 predicted this would happen.

Truman's whole experience as chairman of his Investigating Committee showed him how inefficient the Army and Navy could be when it came to shipping and manpower. Yet as President, he trusted the very same men whom he did not trust as Senator. As a result, thousands of soldiers and sailors, plus several million members of their families are bitter. And when any President loses a big block of political support, he undermines his own strength with Congress.

Truman Lacks 'Brain Trust'

4. FINALLY, TRUMAN has not been able to gather round him sufficient men with governmental "know-how." Running a delicate governmental machine is one of the toughest jobs in the world. There aren't many who can do it. In addition to good Cabinet members, it requires skilled assistants in the White House.

Roosevelt had a weak Cabinet, but he had around him in the White House a group of expert, energetic trouble-shooters who knew Government inside and out and served as a flying football squad to go into this department or that on special jobs. What Truman needs today is a few Tommy Corcorans. Instead he has surrounded himself with a bunch of genial, well-meaning gentlemen, largely from Missouri or Mississippi, who know little about Government and spend almost as much time swimming in the White House pool as they do grappling with the vital problems of postwar America.

This is the most obvious weak spot for Truman to remedy. The others are not easy to repair. In fact the political reactions from the labor situation may be beyond repair.

These are some of the problems Truman faces, plus the general problem that after any war there is a depressing, disillusioning letdown. As qualifications for meeting these problems Truman has sincerity, honesty, energy, courage and a reasonable amount of intelligence.

But he is seriously lacking in experience and governmental know-how. Let's hope he picks up more of the latter before the air becomes too full of dead cats. After all, for better or for worse, he's our President until January, 1949—and that's quite a long way off.

Capital Chaff

FORMER COAST GUARD Comdr. Joel Fischer was in Germany trying to root out hidden Nazi funds. Cross-examining war criminals, he found them anxious to get American lawyers to act in their defense. When asked his views on the best American lawyers, Fischer, with straight face, replied: "You ought to try to get Clarence Darrow or Perry Mason." Fischer's victims took careful notes, not realizing that Darrow has been dead for more than five years and that Mason is a fictional character in Earle Stanley Gardner's mystery stories . . . Government press officials last week beat down a second attempt by War Mobilizer John Snyder to maintain a peacetime censorship over the statements of their bosses. They rejected all censorship schemes flatly during a secret session at the White House, promising to check among themselves to be sure major policy statements of Cabinet members and other key officials are not too far apart . . . Randolph Paul, one of the ablest tax men the United States Treasury has ever had, is completing a book on taxation written for popular reading . . . Former Representative Hamilton Fish still has political ambitions. Frank Gannett's Newburgh (N. Y.) News is keeping his name on the front page every chance it gets—even featuring a statement by the bitterly isolationist Fish that Newburgh should be the home of the United Nations. Following that story, the News printed a letter from a reader who wanted to know why the paper did not observe journalistic convention and run stories about Fish on the obituary page . . . Because neither the Army nor the RFC has a competent staff of experts to determine what surplus material is potentially valuable for civilian commercial use, thousands of dollars worth of material shunt back and forth between the two agencies with the Army insisting it is commercially useful and the RFC saying it is not.

YESTERDAY'S ANSWER

D. C. Urged to Step Up Buying Of Bonds in 'Finish Job Well'

The District Commissioners yesterday proclaimed next week "Finish the Job Week" and urged Washingtonians to step up their Victory Bond purchases to reach the 85-million-dollar goal by December 8 when the drive officially ends.

With only nine days remaining in the drive, the District War Finance Committee reported that individual sales of series E bonds totaled $13,500,000—just half of the city's quota of 27 million dollars.

The accounting period of the drive, however, extends through December 31 and all sales reported to the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond will be credited to the city's over-all quota.

The Commissioners asked that all stores, office and Government buildings and homes display the National Colors throughout the next week.

W. J. Waller, chairman of the drive committee, called for city-wide rallies to promote sales.

"We have come to a crucial point in the Victory Loan drive—and the situation with regard to the Series E sales does not warrant optimism," Waller said.

Other sales reported yesterday were: Individual sales, $1,200,000, raising the total to $30,400,000—72.4 per cent of the 42-million-dollar quota; sales of other issues to individuals, one million dollars, raising the total to $16,900,000—112.7 per cent of the 15-million-dollar quota.

Meanwhile the battle of wits between the Quiz Kids and four United States Senators next Sunday at 7 p. m. promised to be a sellout — netting the compaign $200,000.

Pitted against the giant-minded youngsters will be Senators Ball of Minnesota; Murdock of Utah; Stanfill of Kentucky and Taylor of Idaho. Admission to the contest is a $200 maturity Roosevelt Memorial bond.

Nation-wide sales reported last night totaled $3,393,000,000, of which 906 million were in E bonds. Ted R. Gamble, national director of the drive said that E-bonds sales were 96 million above the Treasury Department's expectations. However, Gamble maintained that the present rate of sales must continue if the drive hopes to go over the top.

Hyattsville to Clamp Down On Violators of Parking Law

The Hyattsville City Council has rejected a proposal for installation of parking meters and decided instead to try strict enforcement of parking laws for a 6-month period.

The council has been attempting to find a solution to traffic congestion on Baltimore blvd., the city's main artery.

Under the plan adopted at a meeting Wednesday night, city police will enforce a one-hour parking law which already exists in the ordinance records.

The fine for violation is $5 and costs, a total of $5.50.

However, police will be instructed to issue only a warning notice during the first 30 days of the tryout period. After that every parking offender will be hailed into court.

The council members declared that there will be no violations excused even if the offender should happen to be the mayor, the chief of police or one of the councilmen.

The city's businessmen were opposed to parking meters. The minority favoring parking meters argued that the city's police force of only five officers would be inadequate to enforce the one-hour parking law.

Mayor E. Murray Gover suggested at the meeting that motorists be urged to use a large free parking area in the rear of the County Service Building. The parking area, which can accommodate 150 cars, is about three blocks from the shopping center of Hyattsville.

The Gallup Poll

Public Favors 15% Pay Raise To Equalize Loss of Overtime

By George Gallup
Director of American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 29.—Questioning of thousands of persons in all parts of the United States reveals the following public thinking in regard to wage increases.

1—A majority of the voting public opposes pay boosts of 30 per cent in hourly rate in former war industries where workers have suffered a 30 per cent average decrease in take-home pay because of a reduction in working hours after the war.

However, while a majority continues to oppose the 30 per cent raise, there has been a slight increase in the number favoring the boost. Whereas last month 33 per cent believed this increase justified in former war industries, today the figure favoring such an increase is 38 per cent.

The majority continues to feel that a 30 per cent increase is excessive.

2—Although the majority opposes an increase of as much as 30 per cent, most voters are prepared to see some increase granted. In addition to the 38 per cent who would favor a 30 per cent raise, another 31 per cent who did not favor this increase said they would favor a pay boost of 15 per cent, making a total of more than two out of every three favoring an increase of at least 15 per cent.

3—As reported in an earlier survey, a majority of voters with opinions on the subject think that prices of automobiles will have to be increased if a wage boost of 30 per cent is granted to workers in the automobile industry.

Entirely aside from how they feel about the necessity for increasing automobile prices, virtually eight out of every ten (78%) say they think prices of automobiles will go up if a 30 per cent wage jump were to go through.

The questions in today's survey:

Because of loss of overtime, the total weekly pay of many factory workers is less than it was during the war. So that their total weekly pay will be the same as it was during the war, these workers want a 30 per cent increase in their hourly rates. Do you think they should or should not receive this increase?

The Vote:

	Today	Last Month
Should	38%	33%
Should not	52	55
No opinion	10	12

All voters not in favor of a 30 per cent wage boost were asked:

Would you favor increasing factory workers' hourly rates by 15 per cent?

The vote:

Favor Increasing by 15 per cent	69%
Oppose	22
No opinion	9

A 30 per cent increase is favored by a substantial majority of union members (65% in today's poll) and it has considerable support also among nonunion workers.

The chief disapproval of the 30 per cent increase comes from farmers, white collar workers, and professional and businessmen.

Atom Scientists' Attack Kept Out Of Tokyo Papers

Tokyo, No. 29 (U.P.).—An attack by American atomic research scientists on the United States authorities who ordered destruction of two Japanese cyclotrons has been barred from publication in the Tokyo newspaper Mainichi because it "discredited occupation authorities in the eyes of the Japanese people," Allied civil censors announced today.

The Association of Oak Ridge Scientists said they regarded destruction of the cyclotrons, machinery used in atomic research, as "wanton and stupid" and a "crime against humanity."

A statement from Gen. Douglas MacArthur's headquarters earlier today said that the destruction of cyclotrons was "specifically ordered by higher authority" and that "occupational forces were merely carrying out instructions they had received."

Acheson Cites Apparent Danger In Giving Facts

By International News Service

Undersecretary of State Dean Acheson declared yesterday that the State Department information services were caught in a dilemma because of widespread charges that they issued "propaganda."

Acheson said that "servicing the public with facts is apparently a dangerous business."

In a speech before the Carnegie Endowment Conference, Acheson emphasized that a "free press is not the whole answer."

BORDEN'S HAVE FOUND A WAY TO BRING YOU ROASTER-FRESH FLAVOR
LIKE HAVING A ROASTER RIGHT IN YOUR KITCHEN
MAKE IT IN THE CUP—THE SWELLEST COFFEE YOU EVER TASTED!

ANNOUNCER: Mmmm...something tells me something special's coming up!

ELSIE: That's coffee roasting!

ANNOUNCER: Gee, wouldn't it be grand if folks could have coffee made right smack out of the fragrant roaster?

ELSIE: They can! Borden's have discovered a way to do for coffee what quick freezing does for garden-fresh vegetables.

ANNOUNCER: Wonderful! But how?

ELSIE: Well, first, they buy choice coffees, roast them, grind them, and brew them right away. Then, while the coffee is at the peak of its flavor—zing!—they take the water out and lock that roaster-freshness in.

ANNOUNCER: Why, Elsie—that's the biggest news since coffee was discovered!

ELSIE: You're right! This special Borden process completely eliminates the period between roasting and brewing, when ordinary ground coffee loses so much freshness.

ANNOUNCER: No fooling?

ELSIE: No fooling! That freshness stays sealed in till you release it—like releasing Prince Charming from a magic spell. Just drop a level teaspoonful of this 100% pure coffee in a cup and add hot water—that roaster-fresh flavor comes right out!

ANNOUNCER: That does it, Elsie! Where's my hat?

ELSIE: Hey!—we're on the air!—come back here!

ANNOUNCER: Not a chance! I'm heading for my grocer's and a jar of Borden's Coffee—that 100% pure coffee—right now!

Read the labels!

There are two completely different types of instant coffee.

One is the "cafe" type, sometimes labelled coffee "product." It is a mixture of coffee and other ingredients, such as dextrins, maltose and dextrose. The other type—represented by Borden's—is 100% pure coffee, nothing else is added.

These two types of instant coffee cost about the same per cup on your table, (regardless of difference in size of jar or price at the store).

In taste, however, there is a difference. To find out which type you prefer, we suggest you try both.

LEONARD LYONS
Loose-Leaf Notebook

New York, Nov. 29.—Louis Marx is head of the company which bears his name, probably the largest toy company in the world. He and his partner-brother, David Marx, operate the company, which was converted to munitions-making during the war. They're usually seen in the company of high-ranking generals. Their friends include Generals Marshall, Arnold, Curtis LeMay and Rosey O'Donnell. Last summer Louis Marx went to Europe to make an industrial survey for General Eisenhower. He lives in a Fifth ave. penthouse, has a Rolls-Royce, and the toys he and his brother give away gladden the hearts of thousands of youngsters throughout the country. . . . But Louis Marx still is in search of self-improvement. Four nights a week, this year and last, he's been studying literature and the dominant ideas of Western civilization by attending the evening classes at NYU and the New School for Social Research.

Veronica Lake

John Berry, the film director, learned his theatrics as a member of Orson Welles' Mercury Theatre. Berry directed "Susie Steps," the Veronica Lake film at Paramount. One day he arrived at the set wearing a worn topcoat over an old sweater. . . . "Please, Mr. Berry," Miss Lake protested, "My directors usually dress" . . . . Berry called a halt in the day's work, went to the wardrobe department, and returned wearing a silk hat, white tie and tails. Until he finished the movie on the set every day Berry wore this formal evening attire, including the hat.

A young lady riding on a bus heard a couple sitting in front of her discussing a political question. She couldn't resist volunteering dissent to an argument proposed by the young man, a Navy lieutenant. He listened, then replied, and they argued the question firmly but pleasantly . . . Then, when it was over, they decided that each at least should know the other's name. "My name's Willkie," said the Navy officer . . . "Mine's Roosevelt," said the young lady . . . "I'm not kidding," said young Willkie. "My name's Philip Willkie. He was my father" . . . "My name's Edith Roosevelt." the young lady assured him. "He was my cousin."

Sunday's front-page dispatches from Nuremberg reported that the lawyers defending the Nazi war criminals were considering inviting a banker named Jeidels to testify for them. Jeidels was not identified . . . Jeidels is Dr. Otto Jeidels, now an official of A. P. Giannini's Bank of America in California. He's Jewish, born in Frankfurt-am-Main, March 19, 1880. He was president of the Berliner Handelsgesellschaft, and became a Swiss citizen in '39. His Berlin home wasn't confiscated. On July 2, 1940, his presence was reported at a New York dinner given for Westrick. While here he made a speech which was attacked by the anti-isolationists. He later stated that his speech was "misinterpreted."

Sammy Walsh, now at the Greenwich Village Inn, is a USO-Camp Shows veteran who once entertained the Shah of Persia by singing "Draw the Patrol Wagon Nearer the Curb, the Step is too High for My Mother." Louis Dreyfuss, the American Minister, briefed him in protocol, warning him that he must click his heels and address the Shah and his wife as "Your Imperial Majesties? . . . "But who introduces me?" asked Vaudevillian Walsh. At the proper moment he obeyed Dreyfuss' instructions, addressed "Your Imperial Majesties," but then his vaudeville m. c. instincts overcame him and Walsh added, "and guests."

Capt. Harry Butcher's book for Simon & Schuster about his experiences as Eisenhower's aide will be the March selection of the Book-of-the-Month Club, which may mean an issue of 500,000 copies. The Saturday Evening Post serialization, which starts next month, will be in more than eight installments. . . . Ketti Frings, the novelist, will bring a suit against David O. Selznick because he notified the other studios that her original story, "I Know You," was similar to a movie he's about to produce. . . . All men who served with the Thirty-fourth Division at Cassino are invited to see Sergt. Harry Brown's play, "A Sound of Hunting," and then visit Sam Levene and the other members of the cast backstage—all free of charge, upon presentation of credentials.

Danny Kaye this week refused a $100,000 offer for four weeks' work at a Miami night club. The club, of cuorse, has a gambling room annex. "I'd be risking my life," Kaye told the proprietor. "To pay me that much money you must be sure of attracting big gamblers. One of them will come in, probably drop $40,000, and then on his way out he's apt to spot me and say 'I came in here to see you, and look how much it cost me.' Then, naturally, he'd kill me."

Ruth Sheldon wrote an article for the current issue of Coronet called "Political Baseball." It tells of a baseball game in 1940 when diplomatic relations were severed between Venezuela and the Dominican Republic after a protest of the Venezuelan victory. Relations were resumed last year to prove to the Axis that there was Western Hemisphere unity. On the day the Sheldon article appeared there was a revolt in Venezuela and the new regime ousted the Dominican representatives while the ball clubs representing both countries were playing their championship game. . . . Lester Stone, press manager of Bill O'Dwyer's mayoralty campaign, is opening his own agency. . . . In Elmer Rice's new play, "Dream Girl," the private, unlisted phone number of a member of The Playwrights is mentioned. He's protesting.

'Too Young to Know' Is Epic of the Obvious On Screen at Earle

THE SCREEN PLAY fashioned for the Warner Brothers by Jo Pagano from a story by Harlan Ware, and given the title of "Too Young to Know," advances the epochal premise that a quality of love slightly transcending mere impetuous and wordy protestation, a little patience and a sacrificial willingness to conform to the spirit of a reciprocal give-and-take are the essentials of a happy marriage, no matter what the ages of the contracting parties.

Robert Hutton

The new exhibit on the screen at the Earle Theater is as revolutionary and novel as that!

To demonstrate again that connubial bliss does not always work out quite so understandingly, and to lend doubtful point to the title, a teen-age boy and girl are plunged into wedlock after a three-week courtship and then permitted to stew for a while in the bitter juices of their intense incompatability.

All this does not become immediately apparent. The action gets under way in Bombay, India, in 1945, when Capt. Ira Enright, who has been fighting the war in the air over China for a year and a half or so, chances upon Patsy Weatherby, an old acquaintance about to be cashiered out of a touring USO show, and is informed, cattily enough, that he is the father of a 3-year-old son, given away to eager foster-parents at birth by his divorced wife.

Flashback and Fol-de-Rol

Through the convenient instrumentality of a favorite phonograph record that recalls more joyous days, the action then flashes back to pick up the adolescent events leading up to the marriage and angry estrangement of the youthful fliers and his child-bride.

The basic fact of this senseless antagonism established in the audience mind, Captain Enright is granted 18 days' leave in the States to straighten things out.

What he does, instead, is to start the domestic war all over again with a venomous determination that is only shaken when an elderly and kindly judge gets both sides of the story and tells the young airman off more gently than he deserves.

Apart from the minor matter of there being no discernible reason why the picture ever should have been made, the business, with all its emphasis on a trite and obvious "moral," is run out sufficiently enough.

Shame Their Characters

Joan Leslie and Robert Hutton portray the roles of Sally Sawyer and Captain Enright with an intelligence that heavily underlines their characters' lack of it.

Miss Leslie manages to grace her performance of a thankless part with variety and an occasional touch of charm that only throws into bolder relief the supreme caddishness of the temperamental lout impersonated by her costar. Neither role is calculated to bring either warmth or sympathy to any heart, least of all, one suspects, to the player called upon to enact it.

The one conspicuously redeeming character in the play is that of Judge Boller, interpreted with fatherly understanding and skill by the veteran Harry Davenport.

Arthur Shields and Rosemary DeCamp play smoothly enough, but without distinction, as Mr. and Mrs. Enright, parents of a son they should have taught better.

The only other assignment of importance is that of the uninhibited Miss Weatherby to the sultry talents of Dolores Moran, who spices a part performance with a throatily sung and welcome interpolated song.

Pardon Came Too Late

Toward the end of the film, after Captain Enright and his young sparring partner have miraculously "grown up" between the ticks of the clock, there are passages of tenderness and considerable emotional grip, but they come a little late for a successful salvage job.

Perhaps "Too Young to Know" is another picture aimed primarily at feminine interest, but about that I wouldn't be knowing—either the intention or its realization.

"Frontier Days," a wild and woolly abbreviated "Western" in technicolor; "Peck Up Your Troubles," a highly amusing Merrie Melodie color cartoon of a courageous little woodpecker and a malignant cat, and the picturized news events are the agreeable supplementaries of a feature which, I am sorry to report, appeals to these eyes and ears as nothing more valuable than an extravagant expenditure of lost motion.

Maryland to Buy $15,350,000 Bonds

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 29 (AP).—Governor O'Conor announced today that the State would purchase $15,350,000 worth of victory bonds with treasury funds.

The funds will be taken from these accounts: Teachers retirement system, $8,500,000; employes retirement system, $300,000; State accident fund, $1,550,000, and general treasury funds, five million dollars.

The Governor said that the State's purchases would be divided among Baltimore City and the counties as credits toward their respective victory drive goals.

Eugene Lowe Burial Today in Hamilton

Hamilton, Va., Nov. 29 (Spl.).—Funeral services will be held tomorrow morning in Purcellville for Eugene W. Lowe, 67, retired farmer living in Hamilton, who died at his home yesterday.

Mr. Lowe was a lifelong resident of the community and the son of the late Joseph and America Silcott Lowe. He was a member of the Methodist Church. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Eva Wiley Lowe, five daughters, Mrs. Mildred Johnson, Mrs. Viola Hulsey, Mrs. Dorothy Taylor, Mrs. Eleanor Keese and Mrs. Catherine O'Malley and one son, Mercer J. Lowe, all of Washington.

HEDDA HOPPER
A Young Man of Rank

Hollywood, Calif., Nov. 29.—Reggie Allen of Philadelphia, who's just out of Navy uniform, will be the Hollywood head of all Arthur Rank's interests.

Bette Davis

Reggie knows his stuff. He not only managed the Philadelphia Symphony orchestra and Stokowski on tour but also headed the story department at Universal studio. Welcome home, Reggie . . . Arthur Rank will do Sir Walter Scott's "Rob Roy" in the story's original setting in Scotland. Stewart Granger, unknown here but popular in England, has the lead.

The Lady Said No

Ingrid Bergman, one of our nicest girls and finest actresses, said no to David O. Selznick. She will not play "Katie for Congress." And, although it might be of concern to other players, I don't believe the money situation is the reason, because I hear she gets around $175,000 a year. That's the price he gets when he rents her out for one picture. This year she's made two. "Notorious" is her last under the Selznick banner . . . In winding up the Hollywood Canteen, I'd like to praise all those who have donated their time and talent so freely, from Bette Davis to the darlings who kept the dishes clean. Most of our stars were only too anxious to appear for the boys. But here are three who never did: Jimmy Cagney, Greta Garbo and Charlie Chaplin.

Another Closed Shop

In our town Santa Claus lane is a closed shop according to the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce. You might have liked to see Betty Grable, Judy Garland, Lionel Barrymore, Van Johnson, or other stars of like caliber on opening night, but the C. of C. wouldn't invite them. . . . Mrs. James Hilton's story, when she divorced her famous husband, was unlike the kind of things he writes. Living with him seemed to have none of the gentleness of "Mr. Chips." . . . Bob Taplinger is becoming our male Elsa Maxwell since he started entertaining all the visiting gold braid from the Navy. That was a delightful one he tossed for Gene Markey and Myrna Loy the other night . . . Joe Breen of the Hays—correction, Johnston—office has approved the script of "Forever Amber." He tells me it's a dilly, and there's one guy I believe . . . No truth whatever to the report that Donald Nelson is even thinking of retiring from the independent producers.

Who's Who in Theater

Henry Fonda's second picture at R-K-O will be "That Girl from Memphis." In it he plays a lad brought up by an evangelistic family—some of whom are pretty narrow minded—so when he meets a "shady lady" he falls for her . . . Paulette Goddard comes home from New York January 7 for "Strangers in Love." . . . Peggy Ryan is wanted for a spot opposite Ray Bolger in his Broadway play. . . . Bing Crosby meets his boss, Henry Ginsberg, in New York and together they'll see "Nellie Bly," which Eddie Cantor is producing. Bing's song writers did the music for it . . . Dennis Morgan will sing at Capt. Clark Sykes' wedding which takes place in the Morgan home. "Cap" hails from Texas . . . Mrs. Bob Hope's crack at the Dorothy Lamour shower when the Bing Crosby gift was unveiled was a honey. Present was a silver mug. Dolores asked if it was a trophy awarded one of Bing's horses.

Army's Odds Stand as Philly Weather Clears

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

A Navy victory over Army would take rank with the great upsets of this century, and if it's any comfort to Navy we'll list a few that did happen.

POVICH

The best-remembered, perhaps, was the strange turn of events in baseball in 1914, when the Boston Braves, struggling in eighth place on July 4, ended with the National League pennant. And in the world series of that year the Braves were supposed to be doomed. They were meeting Connie Mack's Athletics with the McInnis-Collins-Baker-Barry hundred-thousand-dollar infield, but the Athletics didn't win the series. The Braves did—in four straight.

Turf folks like to recall what happened in the Travers Handicap at Belmont in 1930. It was a four-horse race with the famed Gallant Fox and Whichone cofavorites in the betting and a one-eyed old rogue named Jim Dandy quoted at 100-to-1. Like Navy on the eve of the Army game, Jim Dandy appeared ridiculously outclassed.

Gallant Fox and Whichone, as expected, set all the pace. They were lapped on each other coming out of the last turn into the home stretch, and the fans awaited their stretch duel. But from up the track came something that passed them both and won in a gallop. It was, of course, Jim Dandy, quite unconcerned about those 100-to-1 odds.

Back in 1935, Max Baer was the world's heavyweight champion. A year before he had won the title from Primo Carnera with a knockout in the eleventh round. Eleven times he knocked Carnera down in that fight. No champion had ever won the title more impressively, unless it was Demsey's knockout of Willard. Then Baer was matched with Jimmy Braddock.

Braddock had retired once as a fighter, tabbed sa a washed-up light heavyweight. He had been working on the Jersey docks, and later went on the relief roles. You could get odds of 20-to-1 against him the night he fought Baer. And out of that fight Braddock emerged as the new heavyweight champion of the world. That was boxing's biggest upset.

When Joe Louis knocked out Braddock at Chicago in 1937, he was hailed as the new Dempsey. A year before they matched him with Schmeling, who supposedly had reached his peak a half dozen years before. The fight was regarded as a push-over for Louis. Schmeling floored Louis twice and knocked him out.

In 1940, the Chicago Bears came out of the West to play the Redskins for the pro league championship. Three weeks before, the Bears had been licked, 7-to-3, by the Redskins. But in the play-off game it was conceded the Bears had a good chance to win. What never was presumed was that the Bears would beat the Redskins by the all-time record score of 73-to-0.

Boston College's football team in 1941 was headed for the Sugar Bowl in New Orleans when it met Holy Cross in the last game of its regular schedule. Boston College was unbeaten and Holy Cross was having a poor year. Before the first half was over, the folks who had bet on Boston College to beat Holy Cross were paying off. The final score was Holy Cross, 54; Boston College, 12.

Navy, itself, has figured in an upset this year that takes rank with the more memorable. It was the Penn game, when Navy was trailing 7-0 in the last quarter. To win the game, Navy had to score two touchdowns in the last eight minutes against a team whose goal line had not been crossed all season. Navy did that and won, 13-to-7.

Glenn Cunningham, this country's greatest mile-runner in history, knows what an upset is, and how it can happen. In the last Olympics, Cunningham ran the mile faster than it had ever been run on any previous day in history, and didn't win the race. He finished second to an Englishman who broke the record by more than Cunningham did.

A fresh example of what can happen in football is offered up by the Redskins. Last month, the Redskins beat the Philadelphia Eagles, 24-14, and the Eagles did not appear to belong on the same field. Last week, the Redskins played the Eagles again, never got within 25 yards of the goal line, and took a 16-0 beating. All of these things are for any faint-hearted Navy supporters to contemplate.

Redskins' Ace in the Hole May Be Old-Timer Todd

By Al Costello
Post Staff Writer

An old-time stand-by, who raced his way to fame with a football for the Redskins in prewar days, today looms as the possible difference as the Washington Redskins and Philadelphia Eagles go into their final games deadlocked for the Eastern Division title, each knowing one slip would prove fatal to their championship hopes.

Meaning Dick Todd, the "Li'l ol' Boy Down Home," who has come back to the Redskins from the war and now, after three weeks of mostly defensive play, is ready to strut his stuff in an offensive way how that the chips are piled high in the center of the table.

He Came Through

Time was when the Redskins relied on the dancing and dodging, slippery and fleet Todd for a good majority of their ground gains. And seldom did the little fellow fail. He developed into something of a sensation in running back punts and taking passes from his distinguished fellow Texan, Sammy Baugh.

For the past three games, Dick has been used mostly on pass defense. He came out of the game in favor of Steve Bargarus when the other club went into punt formation and has been sitting on the bench when Baugh starts throwing passes.

The only time he was given a shot at carrying the ball came two weeks ago in the Bear game. All he did in his one sweep was to gallop 30 yards and set up the Redskinks' winning touchdown. Had he been given another downfield block he would have gone all the way. He didn't even carry the ball last week against the Eagles.

Learned the "T"

By now Todd has become acclimated with the Redskins' new-fangled "T" (a style of play he never used before) and is just about ready to go. He's 31 now, old as football players go, but if he has lost any of his native speed and shiftiness, no one can notice it. He's been drilling in offensive formations all week and is clamping at the bit to shake off the shackles.

Despite the all-day rain of yesterday, the squad worked out a full three hours at Georgetown University field, setting up defenses for Bill Dudley's passes and ambles and testing offensive maneuvers.

Minors Consider 51 Amendments

Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 29 (AP).—Fifty-one proposed amendments to baseball law will be taken up at the annual convention of the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues (the minors) here December 5-7.

The association, announcing its program today, said that the American Association and International and Pacific Coast Leagues (now Class AA) has submitted 14 amendments, asking creation of a Class AAA to embrace them.

Virginia Gets Night Workout For Tarheels

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 29 (AP).—Virginia's T-formation attack got a final going over tonight in the last stiff drill of the 1945 season which ends against North Carolina in Chapel Hill at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon.

Four quarterbacks, Charlie Ellis, Billy Sullivan, Ed Mifflin and Benton Stevens, alternated in directing backfield play behind the varsity line as the Cavaliers drilled for an hour and a quarter under lights on a water-logged field.

Coach Frank Murray had his field generals run through all Virginia's offensive plays.

Coach Murray tonight emphasized the need for alertness and agressiveness against the heavier North Carolina team. He had linemen and backs give part of their all too short practice session to their offensive blocking assignments.

Ellis will be started at quarterback against the Tar Heels, and will be the only one of Virginia's backs who was in action last year when the North Carolinians were defeated, 26-7 in Norfolk. Brown, who will start at left halfback, played a little in that game as substitute end.

Roger Roth or Jay Kennard will be started at fullback, while Bob Caine may be in at right halfback if injuries keep Bill Sinclair on the bench.

North Schoolboys May Fly South

Middletown, Conn., Nov. 27 (AP).—The Middletown High School football team, scheduled to play Andrew Jackson High at Jacksonville, Fla., December 8 in the annual Kiwanis Club benefit game, may make the trip south by air.

Mayor Salvatore Cubeta reported today that he had been informed by George M. Williams, president of the Russell Manufacturing Co., that the latter had been in communication with Eddie Rickenbacker, director of Eastern Airlines about the matter, and that there was a "good possibility that a plane would be made available for the team.

Pimlico, Md., Nov. 29.—Mahmoudess was in and out of the lead four times, but finally won the Olambala Purse, feature of a dreary day at the races witnessed by some 7500 chilled turf fans. Racing in the colors of J. Dushock, the 3-year-old daughter of Mahmound took the chief money in the $3500 event by some three lengths. A neck in front of a dead heat for third money, came J. H. C. Forbes' Talasea to be second. Alfred G. Vanderbilt's Blenrose and John A. Bell(jr.'s Gallies could not be separated by the camera. Only five competed in the test of a mile and a sixteenth.

Mahmoudess, who fell over backward and otherwise spoiled her chances in her first start here, was all business today. Apprentice R. J. Martin rode a heady race, allowing Gallies, Blenrose and Talasea to take command at different times. In the final drive Mahmoudess disposed of Talasea and went on to win going away.

The winner was the favorite at a $3.50 mutuel and was clocked in 1.54 2/5.

Racing conditions were at their worst. The track was deep in mud and water. Snow that fell during part of the morning turned into a steady downpour of rain. It all added up to one of the worst racing days in Maryland in recent years.

Twelve cheap sprinters were first to see action and the Tempo Farm's Rough Honey led every jump of the 6 furlongs, getting home a length and a half in advance of a photo for second in which the camera gave the nod to J. H. Elliott's Isolation over E. Warner's Ginger Man.

Rough Honey, capably handled by apprentice W. Cherry, paid $9.40.

J. J. Maddock's Maryknoll went to the front and stayed there to win the second race at a $13.20 mutuel while putting the finishing touches on a $70.20 daily double. Four lengths behind the winner came W. Y. Goldborough's Baby Billy to be second two lengths in advance of Molasses Bill. The winner, ridden by a Passaro was clocked in 1:54 2/5 for the mile and a sixteenth. A field of 12 cheap routers competed.

BETWEEN RACES . . . With five trainers accused of stimulating horses, there was some talk among horsemen of a strike this morning. . . . However, the program went on as usual . . . Whether or not there will be a walkout tomorrow remains to be seen . . . The final card is one for lovers of distance racing . . . The shortest race of the day is at 1 1/16 miles . . . They range up to 2½ miles of the $25,000 Pimlico Cup . . . Somebody wisecracked that if a trainer stimulated his horse and the jockey pulled the horse it might be called a "live heat" . . . Jockey Ray Arduini, Washington boy, is going to perform at Charles Town . . . Milton Berle, the comedian, spent the day with the boys in the press box but couldn't laugh off the fact that he was a bad picker . . . Jockey George Challis wore two sweaters all day and refused to take them off to make weight . . . "If you don't like my sweaters, then don't put me on your horse," Challis told trainers . . . I was told that Sarawak is a "get-away" special for the last program.

Johnny Fenlon On Banquet Card

Front Royal, Nov. 29.—Lieut. John L. Fenlon, United States Navy, on military leave, from the University of Richmond, where he served as head coach of football when he entered the service, will be the speaker at the second annual banquet, sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce of Front Royal, tomorrow, for the members of the football squad and band of the Warren County High School.

Lieutenant Fenlon, a football star at George Washington University in the early 30s, coached at James Monroe High School in Fredericksburg prior to going to the University of Richmond, and this season is coaching the eleven from the Oceana Naval Air Station. He expects to get out of the service on December 1.

Macks to Stop Over For Frederick Games

Frederick, Md., Nov. 29.—The Philadelphia Athletics will do most of their spring training in Florida, but will return to Frederick for a week or ten days before opening of the American League season, Earle Mack, son of the venerable Connie Mack and assistant manager of the club, announced here today. Mack said the length of time spent in Frederick will be determined by the number of exhibition games that can be played with clubs en route north.

Logan Ring Substitute

Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 29 (U.P.).—Deacon Logan of St. Louis was signed today to replace Ray (Sugar) Robinson of New York in a 10-round bout against Former Welterweight Champion Fritzie Zivic, December 10.

Army Backers Think These Boys Face a 27-Point Beating

Wilson Again Seeks Play-Off Berth Today

After two postponements of their game because of inclement weather, Wilson and Western will try again to beat the elements and meet today at 3 p. m. in Wilson's Stadium in an interhigh game that will decide who will meet Eastern for the football championship.

Only the Green Tigers and Coolidge's Colts are still in the running for the playoff berth. A win for the Tigers today would clinch second place for them. The Colts, who wil be watching the game en masse, will be rooting for seventh-place Western to pull an upset in which case they would sneak into the playoff. A Western-Wilson tie would necessitate a second-place playoff between Wilson and Coolidge.

Even with their triple-threat halfback star, Gene Taylor, on the sidelines because of ineligibility, the Tigers will be favored to beat the Red Raiders. Behind the stellar blocking of Guards Alan Fitch and Buddy Whittlesey, Wilson will present a versatile array of backfield power in Bill Burke at quarterback, Bob Leonard and Rufe Webb at the halves, and Marty Wiegand at fullback.

The Western attack, based on Coach Fred Mulvey's interpretation of the "T" formation, is built around short, squat Quarterback Don Lichty, who receives assistance from Bob Pritchard and Bo Lamar, halfbacks, and Ted Uhler, triple-threat fullback. Halfback Norm Wacker is also expected to see plenty of action. The Raider forward wall is anchored around Guard Don Moreland, who is also a capable place-kicker.

Wilson.		Western.
Hall	L.E.	Beatty
Schabacker	L.T.	Carpenter
Fitch	L.G.	Rees
Scott	Center	Poindexter
Whittlesey	R.G.	Moreland
Lowe	R.T.	Parrott
Daly	R.E.	Henry
Burke	Q.B.	Lichty
Leonard	L.H.	Lamar
Webb	R.H.	Pritchard
Wiegand	F.B.	Uhler

"Dynamite Joe" Savoldi, former world's wrestling champion, and one time Notre Dame All-American footballer, has been booked to headline next Wednesday night's show at Turner's Arena.

Five Stables Banned From Maryland Turf

Baltimore, Nov. 29 (AP).—The owners and trainers of five stackles were banned in Maryland by the State Racing Commission today, pending a hearing on commission charges that five horses were stimulated at Pimlico.

Four of the horses named won November 19, the other finishing fifth November 17. The action, believed to be the most drastic in U. S. turf history, brought to eight the suspensions in Maryland's fall racing season which ends tomorrow.

Two of the State's most prominent stables, those of W. L. Brann and S. W. Labrot, jr., were affected today.

George P. Mahoney, commission chairman, said six of the season's suspensions followed a secret change in chemists employed to test saliva samples. Beginning November 14, he said, the commission hired Prof. J. C. Munch, of Temple University, Philadelphia, to test Pimlico samples.

Barns Were Raided

The stimulants which the commission said had been used on the five horses were not identified. Tuesday night, at the request of the commission, Federal narcotics agents raided six Pimlico barns and Mahoney said contents of bottles seized were now being analyzed.

Horse owners affected by today's action could not be reached immediately for comment. Purses of the winning horses are being held up pending the hearing, promised for the near future by the commission.

One Only, owned by E. D. Talbert, Washington, and trained by R. F. Curran, was the only horse named which did not win. It ran fifth in the seventh race at Pimlico November 17.

Pilate's Dream, owned and trained by V. S. McClintock of Winchester, Va., the second race; New Challenge, owned by Brann, trained by E. A. Christmas, the fourth race; Shako, owned by Labrot, trained by C. Sutphin, the sixth race, and Bully Gusher, owned by F. W. Page, trained by C. O. Ferguson, the seventh race.

Pimlico stewards were instructed not to accept any entries from the owners and trainers named pending the hearing.

Terps' Practice Is Hampered By Weather

By Newton Bowers
Post Staff Writer

En Route to Columbia, S. C., Nov. 29.—University of Maryland's football Terrapins, 30 of 'em, emmarked last night for Columbia, where Saturday they will clash head-on with University of South Carolina's Gamecocks in their 1945 finale.

The Terps, for the second straight day, were forced to practice in the university armory because of the downpour that left the practice field in a quagmire, and again the drills were limited to offensive plays.

Guards Dick Johnston, Emile Fritz and Center John Schrecongost, the Terps' "ailing trio," missed the workouts for the fourth successive day, but all are making the trip. Head Coach Paul (Bear) Bryant indicated that he way use all three despite their injuries. "We'll need them and then some," Bryant moaned.

Poling Will Lead Attack

In spite of injuries, the Terps, who blasted their way into the collegiate timelight last week with a spectacular 19-13 victory over previously undefeated and untied Virginia, will dish up quite an offensive to the Gamecocks.

Bill (Red) Poling, who was nothing short of terrific in the Virginia affair, passing, running and kicking, will lead the Old Liners' attack, and Bryant is hopeful that the triple-threat halfback comes up with another dazzling performance such as last Saturday.

Poling should get plenty of help from fleet Sammy Behr, who scored on a 90-yard run against the Cavaliers; Dick Tolar, a back of great running ability; hammerin' Hank Bonk, pile-driving fullback who is expected to start despite being injured; and Bill Shultz, quarterback.

Turyn Doubtful Starter

Bryant expressed doubt that Vic Turyn, regular quarterback who was hit hard b influenza a few weeks ago, would be physically well enough to play. Another who'll probably see little action is Bob Piker, former Tech High ace, who injured his legs during practice last week.

All these injuries have been a headache to Bryant. "With the condition of our squad and at the rate our practices seem to be going, our chances of a victory over South Carolina are mighty small," he said yesterday. "If some of our regulars don't roll around into playing form, I'm afraid it'll be more like a nightmare than a football game in Columbia."

The Terps will arrive in Columbia in the early afternoon, and immediately head for Carolina Stadium for a light limbering up drill. Then will follow a good night's sleep, and then—South Carolina.

Winger Kraiger Joins Lions For N.Y. Rover Game Tonight

A 23-year-old winger who helped pace Buffalo's American Hockey League Bisons to a championship in 1942-43, makes his debut with Washington's Lions tonight when they entertain New York's Rovers on Uline ice at 8:30 o'clock.

Charley Kraiger, formerly of the Royal Canadian navy, reported here from Fort Worth, Tex., yesterday and will join the Lions tonight when they enter their bid for a victory which would tie them with the Rovers for third place in the Eastern League.

Indications yesterday were that a new attendance mark exceeding the audience of 5350 which turned out for the opening night's game with Philadelphia will be present tonight. A heavy advance sale continued through yesterday, but good seats still are available in all sections.

Kraiger was a sensation with the Bisons in 1942-43 when he teamed up with Wingman Maxie Bennett, now coach of the Lions, on a line that found Morey Rimstad at center. He is described as an aggressive team player and playmaker, and as a good shot. He will team up with either Vern Kaiser or Bill Glennie on the wings of a combination that finds Nick Phillips at center.

The Lions and Rovers each have won one game and tied another in three starts to date, and will skate out on 50-50 terms tonight. Bill Sutherland, who has shut out the Baltimore Clippers and Philadelphia Falcons, will man the nets for New York while Dick Bittner, hero of last Tuesday's 2-all draw with the champion Boston Olympics, probably will tend goal for the Lions.

The Rovers are bringing back a collection of stars which includes such players as Len Wharton, Ha— Bell, Rene Trudell, Gil Nordin, Cal Gardner, Church Russell, Gus Schwartz, Doug Carrigan and Coach Hal Laycoe.

Texas Defeats Aggies, Gets Bowl Berth

College Station, Tex., Nov. 29 (AP).—Texas roared back in the final period today to beat fierce fighting Texas A. and M., 20-10, to gain its third Southwest Conference football championship in four years and receive the automatic invitation to be host team in the Cotton Bowl.

More than 40,000 fans—largest crowd ever to watch a game in College Station—saw an underdog Aggie team twice come from behind, once to tie the score and once to go ahead 10-7 on substitute John Ballentine's field goal from the Texas 23-yard line.

Then Texas struck quickly for two touchdowns. George Graham hammered right tackle for the touchdown that meant victory and Texas' sixth championship in the 31 years the conference has been organized.

Dick Harris, brilliant Texas center, intercepted a throw from desperately passing Lillard Hart and ran to the Aggie 30-yard line to set up the final Longhorn score. R. E. (Peppy) Blount, reserve end, carried the ball over.

Texas	7	0	0	13—20
Texas A. & M.	0	7	3	0—10

Texas scoring: Touchdowns, Ellsworth (for Sweet), Graham (for Sweet), Blount (for Schwartzkopf); points after touchdown, Layne (2) (placement and pass from Andrews, sub for Baumgardner).

Texas A. and M. scoring: Touchdown, Goode; point after touchdown, Balentine (for Goode) (placement); field goal, Ballentine (placement).

St. Mary's Places Three Players on Coast Star Team

San Francisco, Nov. 29 (U.P.).—St. Mary's Galloping Gaeys, who completely dominated this season's football play on the Pacific Coast, also dominated the annual United Press Pacific Coast all-star grid selection released today.

Three of the Gael aces, Herman Wedemeyer and Charles (Spike) Cordeiro, backs, and End Ed Ryan, were placed on the first team. Another fine performer, Quarterback Dennis O'Connor made the second squad.

The selections:

First Team.		Second Team.
Ryan, St. Mary's	L.E.	Dodge, Nevada
McClure, Nevada	L.T.	Musick, USC
Sparlis, UCLA	L.G.	Austin, USC

All-High Eleven, 'Most Valuable' in Tomorrow's Post

The Washington Post's All-High football team will appear in tomorrow's editions of The Post together with the announcement of the winner of The Washington Post-WINX "Most Valuable Player" contest.

The player chosen as the most valuable and the winner of the contest will be heard as guests of Bob Wolff on his sports program tomorrow on Station WINX at 6:30.

Navy Still 27-Point Underdog

Philadelphia, Nov. 29 (AP).—Prospects of firm footing for Army's brilliant ball carriers helped maintain the West Pointers as stanch 27-point favorites over Navy in Saturday's epic struggle here as the two undefeated elevens began converging on the battle site tonight.

A two-day rain which had threatened to mar the championship game subsided during the afternoon, and the best long-range forecast was for cool, cloudy weather when the teams collide before some 100,000 lucky ticket holders, including President Truman. The Municipal Stadium turf had been covered against the downpour.

Coach Swede Hagberg's Midshipmen, fired up for a furious effort to snap Army's 17-game winning streak, left their camp on the Severn after a final light workout and passed through here late today en route to Pine Valley, N. J., some 20 miles outside Philadelphia, where they were to spend the night.

Last Limbering

Army's mighty squad, under Coach Earl Blaik, was scheduled to leave the Point early tomorrow and to arrive here in time for a limbering up at the stadium. Navy also planned to stretch its muscles in the famous arena where Tunney once upset the experts by belting Dempsey about. The Middies would like to supply a parallel on Saturday.

Philadelphia itself was agleam with the annual fall fever, running a temperature comparable to that of the several ailing players on the two teams. Her already overcrowded hotels were beginning to creak as they tried to meet the onrush of out-of-towners who forehandedly made reservations months ago.

What few good tickets had trickled into the black market were reported changing hands at as high as $70 a pair, with less favored locations scaled down to around $30 the brace. In vast Municipal Stadium the latter seats strongly call for field glasses.

As many Philadelphia citizens saw Army crush a good Penn team only a fortnight ago, there was no inclination here to argue with the odds. Probably never before in the history of the Army-Navy classic has one team been such a nearly unanimous choice to win. About the only question heard is "how many points will Army win by?" Some private Army supporters, in a possible excess of enthusiasm, have spotted Navy as high as 40 points.

Odds Unprecedented

That is very high, considering that this is an Army-Navy game and therefore something special in the way of rivalries. Never has either school, no matter how strong, beaten its chief antagonist by such a margin, though the Cadets of 1903, back in the days of shinguards and flying wedges, crushed a Navy team by 40 to 5 in Philadelphia. This is the record, up to this Saturday, at least.

Those who think the Middies might harness Glenn Davis, Doc Blanchard and Army's other fine backs and make a very close thing of it, beg to point out that Navy is unbeaten this season—a fact somewhat overlooked in the excitement over the Cadets' great victory streak.

They mention, also, that Navy has shown vast improvement in its last two games, in which it ran up 70 points against Michigan and Wisconsin, and that Navy's defense has yielded only 33 points in seven games. Further, they confide that the Middies are in a perfect psychological position, with everything to gain.

All of which is true, but who's going to stop Davis and Blanchard?

Unpredictable Clemson Favored Over Deacons

Richmond, Va., Nov. 29 (AP).—Clemson's voracious Tigers, their appetites whetted by the 21-7 defeat handed the Ramblin' Wreck from Georgia Tech last week, are being pickd by th wisenheimers to maul the Demon Deacons of Wake Forest when the two clash Saturday at Cimson, S. C., in a Southern Conference game which will end the season of both teams.

And, at that, the wise boys may be right, but it wouldn't be safe to offer any long odds. The Deacons are unpredictable this year as shown in their gallant stand against mighty Duke and their surprise edging of both North Carolina and North Carolina State, each of whom was a pregame favorite.

Came Back Strong

But the Bengals from South Carolina have been just as "flighty" in a football sense. After an early season series of losses, relieved only by their 76-0 crushing of weak Presbyterian at the opening of the schedule, Clemson roared back in its tail-end games to tip over some favored opponents, notably the 35-0 whipping of Virginia Tech, the 47-20 hammering of Tulane and its fancy work at the expense of the Engineers from Tech Flats, Atlanta.

The statistics, a sorry measuring rule this year as far as doping goes, favor the Tigers. Their record shows 205 points in their favor against 60 for the opposition in the six games won, two lost and one tied.

Against this the Deacons offer a record of 124 points as compared with 131 for the opposition in the seven games played, neatly split into three wins, three losses and a tie.

Getting Ready

However, Coach Frank Howard of the Tigers is not taking the flattering Baptists any too lightly. In workouts yesterday he impressed upon his linemen the power they are certain to face in the Deacon front-wall stalwarts, Dick Foreman, Pride Ratterree and Dewey Hobbs, and the Deacon's smashing fullback, Rock Brinkley.

At Wake Forest, Coach Peahead Walker yesterday terminated heavy drills for the Clemson clash in a long scrimmage. The squad showed lots of spirit and pep and its attack clicked for long gains against the third team. Nick Sacrinty was back in harness and highlighted the session with a display of accurate passing.

Two other games on the schedule closing out the season bring together North Carolina and Virginia at Chapel Hill, N. C., and South Carolina and Maryland at Columbia, S. C.

Boys' Town Favored Over Gonzaga Tonight

College Park Clash Set At 8 o'Clock

By Herb Heft
Post Staff Writer

Father E. J. Flanagan's star-studded Boys Town eleven that has swept over all opposition from Nebraska through Maryland, sets its sights on its twelfth straight victory of the season tonight when it faces Washington's Gonzaga High at Byrd Stadium, College Park, Md., at 8 p. m.

An invitation was extended to President Harry S. Truman to attend the game, and while he would not commit himself, the Chief Executive indicated that if nothing important came up in the meantime, he would attend.

Should Improve

The lighter, but faster, Nebraskans are heavily favored to improve on the 12-6 margin by which they defeated the Purple Eagles in their last intersectional meeting here in 1943. In 11 games so far, Boys Town has rolled up 365 points to 50 points for the opposition. Gonzaga, on the other hand, has tallied 173 points in nine games to 37 for the opposition.

The two teams haven't met a common foe on their season's schedules, but the Loyola eleven of Baltimore, which bowed to Boys Town by four touchdowns last week, was able to defeat Washington's Georgetown Prep by three touchdowns, while Gonzaga was also able to beat the Little Hoyas by three touchdowns, which indicates, on paper at least, that the Midwesterners should triumph by four touchdowns tonight.

Despite the apparent odds against his team, Coach Joe Kozik of Gonzaga would concede nothing last night. A look at Gonzaga's record shows that in winning eight out of nine games this season, the Eagles were held to less than two touchdowns only once, in their 6-0 defeat at the hands of Coolidge, and have been scored on more than once in only one game. The Nebraskans were held to only one touchdown in one game, and were scored on three times in one game, and twice in another. However, they are unscored on in their last three games.

O'Neill, Daly Out

Ailments, which have dogged their trail all season, caught up with the Eagles again this week, and as a result, three regulars may not see action. Pat O'Neill and Phil Daly, sparkplugs of the Gonzaga backfield, will definitely not start because of severe cases of influenza, and Bernie Lavins, All-Prep tackle, may not start because of a bad cold. In addition, Quarterback Dick Redmond and Halfback Hugh Logan will not see much action because of slight injuries suffered in the recent St. John's game.

However, the visitors will be in top shape for the kick-off. Halfback Frank Roe and Fullback Kenny Morris were named cocaptains by Coach Skip Palrang, who also reported that Halfback Jimmy Mitchell, who shares the team's high-scoring honors with Morris, has recovered from a cold and will start.

The probable line-ups:

Gonzaga		Boys Town.
O'Shea	L.E.	Gilbertson
Riesebeseer	L.T.	Ortega
Miller	L.G.	Gunnell
Gaughan	Center	Oden
Wiedemeyer	R.G.	Schmidt

Hunting & Fishing

With Jack Bell

Forty or fifty years ago Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia were "shot out" States, especially for deer. Twenty years ago, in Pennsylvania, if anyone observed a wild deer or some lucky hunter brought one into town, it was big news. Records now prove that nearly 800,000 deer have been killed in Pennsylvania in the past twelve years.

But if you think Pennsylvania's success with deer has been a miracle, you are wrong. It was brought about by a long-term management program, courageous action on the part of State officials in the face of powerful opposition.

During the past spring we spent considerable time fishing in Pennsylvania trout streams north of Lock Haven and Jersey shore. On the banks of one stream alone, in company with Paul Knowlden, Roy Schwab and Wesley Jones, Washington anglers, we found nine dead deer that had perished during the winter of '44 from starvation and exposure. A forest ranger on the Little Pine told us how he found 16 dead deer shortly after the thaw. He said some of the deer were hanging in the tree tops. Evidently what had happened was that the herd in its search for food, attempted to cross the narrow valley that had been drifted with deep snow and broke through the weak crust only to perish by suffocation in the drift. The depth of the winter snow could be measured by the height of the evenly cropped branches that appeared as though one had used a lawn mower. Thousands of acres of second growth timber land looked like a park, all the lower branches having been consumed as far as a deer could reach.

Maryland and Virginia are now beginning to show evidence of such overcrowded conditions. Maryland, especially, shows a marked increase, which is not due to stocking, but because a lot of deer in their search for food and harassed by Pennsylvania's large number of hunters, have crossed the border line seeking refuge.

Pennsylvania's deer hunting season opens tomorrow morning, December 1, and extends to December 15. Maryland's six-day season opens Monday, December 3, and closes December 8. We venture to predict a record kill for Maryland. Virginia's complicated deer-hunting season west of the Blue Ridge is closed. East of the Blue Ridge the season opened November 20 and closes January 5. We advise hunters who wish to hunt in Virginia to check the seasons for various counties.

VPI Presents Letters to 17 Footballers

Blacksburg, Va., Nov. 9 (AP).—W. L. "Monk" Younger, VPI director of athletics, announced last night that 7 football players and two managers will receive varsity monograms for their services during the 1945 grid campaign.

The teehmen, playing their first season since 1942, posted a record of two wins against half a dozen setbacks.

Bill Hegamyer, an end, is the only upperclassman to earn a monogram. He is in his junior year. Head Coach McCauley McEver said the team will meet Monday to elect a captain.

Frank Ballard, Asheville, N. C.; Clinton T. Barns, Chatham Hill, Va.; Ralph C. Beard, jr., Cumberland, Md.; Floyd Bowels, Richmond, Va.; Thomas C. Burns, Hyndman, Pa.; Charles M. Forbes, Hilton Village, Va.; John Hamilton, Huntington, W. Va.; William H. Hegamyer, Richmond, Va.; Robert A. Hess, Charleston, W. Va.; Timothy R. Lawler, jr., Clifton Forge, Va.; Stanley M. Majcher, Anbridge, Pa.; Ross Orr, Chatham Hill, Va.; John B. Ratliff, jr., Christiansburg, Va.; E. Gerald Staley, Wayne, W. Va.; Sumner D. Tilson, jr., Blacksburg, Va.; Robert J. Wellman, Wayne, W. Va., and Gerald Zekert, Norfolk, Va.

Managers awarded monograms were John Robert Kautz, Charleston, W. Va., and John B. Parker, Danville, Va.

Chattanooga Routs Ole Miss

Chattanooga, Tenn., Nov. 29 (AP). The University of Chattanooga Moccasins turned in a surprising 31-to-6 victory over the University of Mississippi Rebels today to end one of their most successful football seasons. Some 7000 shivering fans watched the contest.

The outcome was never really in doubt from midway of the first quarter when Gene Roberts, Chattanooga's ace fullback, plowed over for the first of his three touchdowns. The Moccasins added two more touchdowns in each of the second and third periods. The faltering rebels couldn't hit pay dirt until the final quarter.

Mississippi	0	0	0	6	—6

Mississippi scoring: Touchdowns—McWright (for Chal/zat).

Camp Lee First Foe of Bainbridge

Bainbridge, Md., Nov. 29.—The Bainbridge Commodores, winner of 50 out of 63 cage contests the past two seasons, open their 1945-46 hardwood season here Sunday, December 9, as they clash with the Camp Lee quintet in the first of the four-game series between the two service teams.

A 39-gam schedule has been released for the Bainbrige cagers which tops the 33 and 30-game schedules played by the Commodores these past two seasons. In scoring 28 wins against five losses last year, Bainbridge was the second rated team in the country among the service quintets, the Norfolk Naval Air Station team getting the number one spot.

Burley Bowl Game Ends in 7-7 Tie

Johnson City, Tenn., Nov. 29 (AP). High Point College, High Point, N. C., and Milligan College of Johnson City battled to a 7-7 tie here this afternoon in the inaugural Burley Bowl game, part of the annual burley festival.

Tipton returned an intercepted pass in the third to score for High Point. Richardson plunged over in the fourth for Milligan.

Argentina Hits Nazi-Fascism, Embassy Says

By the Associated Press

The Argentine Embassy took occasion yesterday in the midst of hemisphere-wide discussion of a proposal for collective intervention aimed at Buenos Aires, to distribute a lengthy document intended to prove it had lived up to the Mexico City resolutions.

The embassy's action was significant since the Uruguayan proposal calls for multilateral intervention when one American country is violating its international obligations.

The document referred to a previous note sent by the Argentine government to the foreign offices of the American Republics on the same subject. It was originally released by the foreign office in Buenos Aires and distributed here for the convenience of newsmen.

"Since the last note," the document said, "significant events have taken place animated by the firm desire of the government to continue allying itself with the sister republics of the hemisphere.

"The vigilante committee has been strengthened, German and Japanese schools have been closed, associations and societies of this origin have been eliminated.

"So that there will not be any doubts (the government) has increased its fervor in suppressing and wiping out all centers of Nazi-Fascism or totalitarian inspiration."

"Such is the work that has been done in two months," the doctor said.

It will continue "until the very end in preservation of an international tradition which was never contradicted and which was always a symbol of respect to another's sovereignty and of just exaltation of our own."

5000 Telegraph Workers in N. Y. Vote to Strike

New York, Nov. 27 (AP).—Five thousand Western Union employes, who severely curtailed telegraphic operations in the New York Metropolitan area, by walking off their jobs to attend a mass meeting, tonight voted unanimously to strike.

Their action was not decisive because all Western Union members of the American Communications Association, CIO, in the area must participate in a strike vote, to be conducted by the National Labor Relations Board next Thursday, before action can be taken. But the vote showed clearly how formal balloting would go, since there are only some 7500 union members in the area.

The union decided on a strike vote after the company appealed a decision of the Regional War Labor Board granting a 10-cent per hour increase.

Augusta Tops Fishburne, 12-6

Waynesboro, Va., Nov. 29.—Fishburne Military School was nosed out in last 20 seconds of its game with Augusta Military Academy here this afternoon by a score of 12-6.

Fishburne finished its football season with six wins and two losses. Hallowell, Hubbard and Isenhower starred for Fishburne.

Wentz Travel Treasures at Auction Shop

"All that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave
"Await alike th' inevitable hour . . ."

Eighteen times Mrs. Georgie B. Wentz went around the world. At 76 she rode camels in Egypt and elephants in India. She was "always a good sport."

Mrs. Wentz

Born Georgianna Nichols in New York City three years before the Civil War, she never lacked for a silver spoon. She traced her ancestors, when she bothered, back to the Rev. Peter Buckley, founder of Concord, Mass.

She married into more wealth, James G. Wentz, lawyer and a dealer in large real estate. When he died in 1926, she kept right on traveling.

Last Inevitable Journey at 87

Last July, at the age of 87, Georgie Wentz took the last inevitable journey. And today the products of her travels, the beautiful things she brought back to Washington from all parts of the globe, rest in Williams Auction Co. storeroom, 918 New York ave. nw.

"She never came home without something," a member of the family said yesterday. She brought rugs from Persia—large silk handtied ones "384 knots to the inch." From China she carted handpainted lacquered tables, screens and taborettes. From Venice came a large and very beautiful bronze Mercury and Boy With Thorn in Foot, and much ornamental glass.

From France, Germany

A living room suite of gold-leaf, silk upholstered Louis XVI pieces came with her from France. In Germany she picked up choice Dresden and Meissen china, and so it went. A little part of the world she loved came home with Georgie Wentz each time.

In 1928 she built a $100,000 home at 2841 McGill ter. nw., and lived there, when she was not traveling, until the winter of 1944. Her last world tour was made in 1938, when she was 80, and her homecoming baggage bulged with more items from Italy and Egypt and other strange places.

Last winter she turned the house over to the British for warwork and went to Newport where she maintained another residence until her death last July.

Glenn to Speak At School Dinner

Martinsburg, W. Va., Nov. 29.—Marshall (Sleepy) Glenn, former West Virginia University coach and also former coach in athletics at the high school here, will be the speaker at the first annual grid banquet honoring the football team of Martinsburg High December 5, it was announced today by the sponsor, the Martinsburg High School Stadium Association.

Members of the 1945 team, Eastern Panhandle champions, will receive their letters, and the 1945 honoraay captain will be designated.

OPA to Grant Higher Prices For Furniture

By Christine Sadler
Post Staff Writer

In an effort to boost production of low and medium priced furniture, the Office of Price Administration will grant price increases to manufacturers for about two thirds of the various types of home furniture made by them in 1942.

Increases on various items will range from 4 to 20 per cent, OPA announced yesterday.

The agency indicated that consumers would have to share some of the upswing, but said wholesalers and retailers might be able to absorb most of it. Conferences on what part the distributors can absorb without cutting their profits below prewar levels are now under way.

Higher Cost of Materials

Manufacturers need the increase to compensate them for higher costs of lumber and textiles, OPA said, and to encourage them to swing away from the production of higher priced lines on which many of them concentrated during the war.

Not all the increased cost of furniture noted in the cost of living index was due to the manufacturers' desire to make only high cost goods, officials pointed out. The best types of lumber were taken for war work. Textiles and springs were almost nonexistent during many of the war months and

Mary Haworth's Mail

Couple, 60, Become Engrossed in Grandson Just When They Were About to Realize Long Dream of Wintering in Florida; What to Do?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Your counsel is worthwhile and we would like your opinion on what we should do in this situation: At the age of 60, my husband and I are financially independent. For years we have looked forward to a time when we could spend each winter in Florida. We are tired and deserve this.

Our daughter, who has been married for seven years, presented us with a grandson one year ago. He is a fine little fellow and loves us both. Our daughter and her husband have only a few friends here, and so we see them every morning or afternoon.

If we go to Florida, they will miss us very much, we know; and so will our grandson. And we may feel, all the time we are away, that we are missing a great deal, too, in spending the winter apart from him. It's so hard for us to make up our minds just what to do! What would you do? O. F.

Take a Holiday; All Will Profit

DEAR O. F.: It is time to break up this family huddle for the good of all concerned, because it is neither normal nor desirable for elderly parents and married children (with or without offspring) to foster and cling to a program of daily visits for mutual consolation, to the exclusion or neglect of other social connections.

It may be true, as you say, that your close attendance on your daughter's household makes up to her for the friends she lacks. But if so, that arrangement is bad. Even though your intentions are generous, you are doing her a great disservice if you are encouraging her to lean on you and let the world go by.

However, I wonder if your version of the situation is correct? I wonder if you, for lack of social initiative, with time on your hands and nothing more interesting to do from your viewpoint, and possibly pursuant to a 40 years' routine of thinking first, last and always of family—I wonder if you may have dreamed up an acute sense of responsibility to her, especially since the baby came, that the facts don't justify, for the unconscious purpose of treating yourself to a second lease on bustling matriarchal consequence?

Doting Elders Are a Handicap

IT IS my feeling that your doting solicitude is both a social and psychological handicap to your daughter, whether she recognizes it or not. I believe she would experience relief and social profit in the long run if, beginning now, you cleared out to Florida annually, leaving her to manage the child as she sees fit, and even loaf in disorder when the spirit moves, instead of keeping him and the household up to snuff for your daily anticipated excursions behind the scenes.

As for why she hasn't friends—with her child still in the infant stage, and possibly with all her own work to do, and your high standards of excellence to meet, maybe she is too tired at present to make any social effort. Maybe her idea of heaven just now would be to live on a desert island with husband and child, until she recoups the strength spent in producing him and seeing him safely through his first year.

Rest in Sun Is Not a Sin

POSSIBLY before the child came she was employed and too engrossed in her job to feel the need of outside affiliations. Also, I assume she is in her thirties—as you are 60 and she has been married some years—and child bearing and rearing at that age is a major nervous strain, not so easily taken in stride as in the twenties. But when she gets her second wind, I daresay she will draw friends around her if she wants them—and if you give her elbow room to shift for herself.

Finally, I think this: Your anxious reluctance to take your ease in Florida for a season gives the measure of your need to get out of a rut and stretch your mind in new surroundings. I think you've probably held your nose to the grindstone for so many years that you have a guilty feeling it would be sinful to sun yourselves while others toil. Nonsense. Go in peace to take the rest you've richly earned.

MISS NORMA GOODIN
... To wed Army flier

Norma Goodin Reveals Plans

Mrs. Charles Martin Woodward, Southgate, Ky., announces the engagement of her daughter, Miss Norma Janrose Goodin, to Lieut. Robert Scott Walker, USAAF.

Miss Goodin was graduated from Portsmouth High School, Portsmouth, Ohio, and has been employed at the Army Air Forces Convalescent Hospital, Fort Thomas, Ky.

Lieutenant Walker is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Craighead Walker, Bronxville, N. Y., formerly of Scarsdale and Washington.

After graduation from Officer Candidate School, Miami Beach, Lieutenant Walker was assigned to Bradley Field, Conn., and for the past 13 months has been stationed at Fort Thomas. The wedding will take place at St. Teresa's Church, Southgate, January 12.

At Least 40 New Canned Meat Items Soon Will Be Available

Some odd twists are being given to foods. And I don't mean a candlestick salad made from a banana, a pear-half with clove-studs to effect a bunny, or a turnip manipulated into a calla lily.

New Food Twists

Paint is now being made from potatoes. No, it won't cut into the supply so that you can have this vegetable for mashing, frying and baking. The Department of Agriculture is making paint out of potatoes—rather, making the alcoholic ingredient that eventually goes into paint— to prevent wastage of surplus potatoes.

Thanks to the Quartermaster Corps we are going to be repaid for the anxious moments we had during the war, when meat was not to be had for the asking. Cooks will now have at least 40 canned meal items from which to select for the variety of canned meats has been quadrupled.

Hash Got Tiresome

Twelve canned meat items made up the bulk of the protein diet of American soldiers at the outbreak of the war. Among them were the familiar corned beef, corned beef hash, deviled ham, chili con carne, luncheon meat and sausage meat. Now there are 40 items, most of them unfamiliar to cooks. It was because war-born canned meats had to be packed into cans that the Quartermaster Corps drafted the steel-and-tin can to do the carrying jobs.

Largely due to the work of the Subsistence Research and Development Laboratory of the Quartermaster Corps, located in Chicago and directed by Col. Rohland A. Isker, the meat changed from hash to hunks. No one wants to eat hash constantly—certainly not the GIs on long marches or those who spent grueling hours in the lines of combat. So the Quartermaster Corps decided to do a bit of reconverting themselves and from the British and their bully beef came the idea of furnishing meat in man-sized chunks rather than in ground form.

Bacon, one of the new foods to be put in tins, made a tremendous hit in the Army. One soldier wrote, "The bacon in the new 10-in-1 is worth going to war for . . ."

But bacon is only one of the innovations. Similarly, the new ham and canded sweet potato dinner, the pork and applesauce, beef and gravy, brought meals with more of a home-cooked flavor to fighting men everywhere. These convenient ready prepared meat dinners will be on the grocers' shelves as soon as the supplies of meat and tin permit. The meat is coming back and it won't be long until the tin will be back too.

Grapefruit Versatile Fruit

But there are some foods already available to which we can give new twists. Nature gave a generous nod this year to Florida's grapefruit groves, so that our markets are filled with this fruit that is so rich in vitamin C. Any cook who knows her nutrition primer is aware that the body doesn't retain its supply of vitamin C, so has to have it renewed daily. It's a cinch to do this renewing now that grapefruit are here in good quantity and at a reasonable price.

If there are some in your family who must have their grapefruit sweetened, don't let the lack of sugar shadow your enjoyment of serving this fruit. What about drizzling corn sirup over the top of the grapefruit half? Maple sirup, too, is good to spread on a grapefruit half for breakfast.

Getting the good from Florida's fresh grapefruit crop is easy if you use it for more than the morning meal. Serve this fruit for dessert. Try topping it with a sauce made from thin vanilla pudding. It's not only delicious but it saves precious sugar.

Get Acquainted With Grapefruit

Here are a few suggestions that will get you acquainted with the tantalizing goodness of grapefruit: Top broiled fish with grapefruit sections the last 10 minutes of broiling; place swirling grapefruit sections on top of a sweet potato casserole before it takes its oven trip; thin mayonnaise with fresh grapefruit juice; toss grapefruit sections into a crisp green salad.

Some persons think it too tedious to prepare grapefruit sections. If you've ever watched a chef section a grapefruit you know it is possible to get big, beautiful sections, each one whole and perfect, if you give the right twist. Here's the way to do it easily:

Sectioning of Grapefruit: First, slice off the peel at the blossom end. Holding the grapefruit firmly on a working surface, cut down the grapefruit with a sharp knife, cutting off the peel in strips instead of whittling around in the old-fashioned way. When all the peel has been cut from the fruit, trim off the bits of membrance that may cling to the fruit. Then take knife and cut between the membrane that separates each section, cutting clear through from the top to the bottom. Lift out each section as you work, and you'll find you have whole, perfect grapefruit sections for salad or dessert.

Bad Methods 'May' Reap Good Returns

By Mildred Meyer Eldred

This is in the nature of a gentle warning to young persons who think they can judge the merits of any advice on the basis of their own experience. Experience is a good teacher, but even when research is done properly scientists hesitate to make positive statements until some course of action or treatment has been tried, not on hundreds but on thousands of guinea pigs, animal or human.

But this does not influence many a young mother to say cockily, "You are all wrong. I have tried some course of action with my two children and it has worked perfectly."

Poor Method May Work

Many a mother has good luck with methods which are not considered desirable. There are lots of children who can be trained to have good toilet habits early in life. But more of them become so fixed in their drinking habits that the mother is in despair because the child will not accept a cup.

Use Tried Schemes

Children have been spanked and continued to love their parents. But, in the main, spanking only causes a child to be resentful and antagonistic not only toward the parents who spank him but toward everyone who in future represents authority to him.

Sometimes the way in which a mother works out her problem makes it successful though she uses undesirable methods. Mothers can avoid spanking and still be mean mothers, who arouse only dislike for what they espouse.

But always, if one wants the best results, one uses the methods which have worked for the most people. Then one is working so as to inspire success, instead of doing what seldom works and so is courting failure.

Our leaflet No. 78, "Help to Be Had From Books," offers lists of helpful books for those who enjoy a lengthy discussion of troublesome subjects. It may be had by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope with this request to Myrtle Meyer Eldred in care of The Washington Post.

Town Talk

By Eva Hinton

CANDLES SHONE through unshuttered windows into a rainy dusk to welcome friends to the Henri Claudels' delightful cocktail party the other afternoon. Inside, the Claudels' house was even more pleasing in the same cheerful way that white-frosted birthday cakes and red Christmas candles are pleasing to children. The dining room candles shone from windows framed in gay rose-red hangings. Walls were white and the furniture was white-painted iron and sparkling glass. Trays of artistically arranged hors d'oeuvres resembled bright tulip beds with their canapes of black or orange caviar, golden stuffed eggs and varied sandwiches.

Mme. Claudel

In the drawing room white walls were a background for furniture upholstered in chartreuse yellow and brown. Sconces of massed white seashells flanked the mantel beneath which burned a wood fire. Against the opposite wall was an antique spinet converted into a handsome desk.

Mme. Claudel did the decorating herself. She said that, since she had to keep things rather simple, she determined to make the house, especially the dining room, "fun."

Several very excellent white sculptured heads are the work of Mme. Claudel's sister, who was married recently to John W. Russell of the British Embassy. The Russells are now in London and expect to leave soon for his new post in Warsaw.

Mme. Bonnet came to the Claudels' party (and this is news) HATLESS, with her black hair piled in shining puffs. Handsome Mrs. Harold Butler wore a stunning hat of pale pink feathers and Mme. Winckler, wife of the Second Secretary of the French Embassy, looking like a China princess in a frock of blue taffeta and a hat of feathers the color of cocoa sprinkled with sugar.

Genevieve and Dora Tarchiani, popular daughters of the Italian Ambassador, were there and Mme. Luguet, wife of the French Air Attache. Also the Walter Lippmanns, the Andre Boissiers, the Guy de Kellers, Jean Baube, and Count Gustaf Bonde.

VIVACIOUS Mrs. Frazer Dougherty, the former Page Huidekoper, asked a few friends for cocktails the other afternoon. The Dougherty and their two babies are visiting Mrs. Dougherty's mother, Mrs. Prescott Huidekoper, in Georgetown.

Mrs. Dougherty received her guests wearing Chinese-looking lounging pajamas of silver brocade. At the opposite end of the costume scale was attractive Mrs. Robert McIlvaine in her favorite well-cut sports clothes. Mr. McIlvaine, being newly released from the service, their friends hope to see them once more in their old haunts in Washington and the Virginia hunt country.

As if for complete variety of costume beautiful Mrs. Duncan Pitney wore a chic afternoon frock. She was chatting with Arthur Christie, the sight of whom took me back to Paris, where I last saw him a lot of years ago.

A UNIVERSITY professor arrived at an academic gathering and found a colleague holding forth importantly and at boring length. Slyly the newcomer whispered to the loquacious one, "You are breaking Rule 6."

"And what are the other rules?" pursued the questioner.

"There are no other rules," replied the professor.

Friends of Mrs. Albert Dewey will be glad to know she's back in town and has opened her house for the winter. Mr. Dewey is expected to arrive soon.

Mme. Lacoste Tea Hostess

Mme. Lacoste, wife of the French Minister, will entertain at tea today at her home on Woodland dr. for Mrs. Henri Claiborne, chairman of the junior committee, and committee members of the United Nations War Relief annual Christmas bazaar which will be held Monday and Tuesday at the Statler Hotel.

Members of the committee who will attend include Mrs. Claiborne Pell, Miss Lydia Langer, Miss Nancy Rheem, Mrs. John James Green, Mrs. W. L. Breese, Miss Gloria Sally Bradley, Miss Pat Parker, Miss Emily French Myers, Miss Elizabeth Polk Benson, Mrs. Frank Dieuaide and Miss Jane Cain.

Return From Gotham

Senator and Mrs. Dennis Chavez and son, Dennis Chavez, jr., returned yesterday from a short visit to New York. While there they attended the dinner Wednesday night at the Plaza in honor of the Mexican Ambassador and Senora de los Monteros.

Dwight Davis, Ex-Secretary Of War, Dies

Dwight Filley Davis, 66, former Secretary of War and former Governor of the Philippines Islands, died Wednesday night shortly before midnight at his home, 2145 Decatur pl. nw., of a heart ailment.

Mr. Davis had been ill since last April when he suffered a heart attack. His condition became worse three weeks ago and he was in a coma when he died.

At the bedside at the time of death were his wife, Mrs. Pauline Davis, and his four children, Mrs. Roger Makins, Mrs. W. McChesney Martin, Mrs. Allan Hermes and Dwight F. Davis, jr.

Mr. Davis was a veteran of the first World War, decorated for valor in action and came here as director of the reorganized War Finance Corporation. Two years later he became Assistant Secretary of War and in 1925 was made head of that department. He was named governor of the Philippines in 1929 and served until 1932.

Mrs. Marie Gasch, 'Beatrice Fairfax' Columnist, Dies

Mrs. Marie Manning Gasch, 70, who created the "Beatrice Fairfax" column for the Hearst newspapers 47 years ago, died of a heart attack Wednesday at her home, 1753 P st. nw.

Mrs. Gasch was the wife of Herman E. Gasch, Washington real estate man. She is also survived by two sons, Oliver and Manning.

Mrs. Gasch entered newspaper wor kin London and later became a special writer for the New York Evening Journal. She originated her "Beatrice Fairfax" column, featuring advice on love and marriage, in 1898.

After her marriage in 1905, she devoted herself to magazine writing, but resumed the column during World War I, and again in 1929. For the past decade, Mrs. Gasch had also been a member of the Washington staff of International News Service.

Funeral services will be private.

Doris Keane

New York, Nov. 25 (INS).—Doris Keane, famous beauty of the American and British stage for three decades, died today in Leroy Sanitarium.

Miss Keane, best known for her starring performance in the perennial play "Romance," would have been 64 December 12.

She gave her first performance as a professional in New York in 1903. Miss Keane was married to Basil Sydney, British actor and playwright.

New York, Nov. 25.—A strike by 4000 drivers and helpers of the Railway Express Agency in New York and Jersey City, to begin Saturday, was voted today.

The workers rejected a 10-cents-an-hour increase recommended by an emergency board appointed by President Truman.

Corens' Appeal Attacks Court Procedure

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 29 (AP).—The Maryland Court of Appeals handed down six decisions today and heard three appeals, including one by attorneys for Henry H. Corens, Bethesda, who was convicted of the second degree murder in the slaying of his wife.

Corens asked the court to grant a new trial of the case in the Anne Arundel County Court in which he was sentenced to 18 years in Maryland Penitentiary.

In arguing the Corens case, attorneys for the convict presented eight points they questioned in the lower court's procedure:

Testimony of Richard F. Utz, a Fairfax, Va., county officer, who found what witnesses said was the head of the deceased Mrs. Corens. (The alleged body was never found.)

Dr. J. W. Brd's testimony as to whether the head in the case had ears or not.

The presence or absence of human blood or tissue on 19 articles admitted in evidence and their weight with the jury.

Introduction of letters written by Corens to Thelma Pack.

If the jury should have been permitted to view Corens' house and see the arrangement of the objects used by the State in its case in photographic form.

Tax Relief Near For D. C. Workers

Approximately 18,000 District employes will have a smaller tax "bite" taken out of their checks for the last half of December, District Auditor A. R. Pilkerson said yesterday.

The new new reduced withholding tax applies to wages paid on or after Jan. 1, 1946. Most of the District workers will receive their checks for the second half of December on Jan. 8.

District Court Called 'Sordid' By Judge Laws

By James E. Chinn
Post Staff Writer

Conditions of the 150-year-old District Court were bluntly branded as "sordid" yesterday by Chief Justice Bolitha J. Laws.

Testifying before the House Public Buildings and Grounds Committee on a bill authorizing construction of a new $10,300,000 Federal courthouse, he warned that unless the project is carried out "you'll find our court in a most dangerous condition."

Cites Bad Conditions

1. Criminals — even men charged with murder—have to be marched across an open court from one building to another with only handcuffs linked to an escorting deputy United States marshal to stop a break for freedom.

2. Witnesses get lost trying to find the right courtroom in the right building—a situation that often delays a trial.

Thinks Action "Imperative"

Justice Laws enumerated a long chain of other conditions which he said have "impaired" the work of the court in quality and quantity and made it "imperative" that the new courthouse be built "at the earliest possible moment."

Because of the cramped quarters, he declared, witnesses are "herded about like cattle, not like human beings," and jurors wander about the corridors with no place to sit except on steps of the interior stairways.

He said a cell block had to be converted into chambers for a visiting judge. There is inadequate space for storage of the records of the probation officer and he has to take many of them home for safekeeping. Records of clerks are scattered around with a resulting loss in efficiency, he said.

"I have been utterly appalled at the number of men and women called for jury service—some of them our outstanding citizens—who have asked to be excused," said Justice Laws. "That may be, in a possible way, due to conditions at the court where there are no comforts or conveniences."

Sees Heavier Calendars

A big postwar increase in the work of the court was predicted by the chief justice, who said he saw more and more cases "coming day by day"—some of them important Department of Justice cases that would take from two to four months to try. Although the criminal docket has been reduced from 525 at the beginning of the year to 225, he explained, it will inevitably rise again, just as it did after World War I.

Justice Laws told the committee he believed the 50-50 cost sharing plan for the proposed new courthouse—an equal division between the Federal and District Governments—was "entirely reasonable." He expressed the hope that the controversy over the financing plan "would not be the means of frustrating or delaying our program."

Judge Finis J. Garrett of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals urged the committee to recommend that his court be allowed to move into the building occupied by the United States Court of Appeals for the District when the proposed new courthouse is completed.

The committee will continue hearings on the bill today at 10:30 a. m. in room 245 of the old House Office Building.

German Anti-Nazis Hold Own Court; Verdict Is 'Guilty'

Berlin, Nov. 25 (AP).—More than 1500 anti-Nazi Germans held their own "court of justice" for the Nuernberg defendants in Berlin's huge broadcasting house today and returned unanimously a verdict of guilty.

Speakers during the two-hour demonstration branded the Nazi leaders now on trial before an International tribunal at Nuernberg as "common criminals" and charged that Nazilism dragged Germany into the gutter.

The meeting climaxed a week of widely voiced disappointment by newspapers and political leaders that anti-Nazi Germans have not been permitted to act the role of "second accusers" at the trial. The speakers, however, admitted that Germany lost the right to representation at Nuernberg by inability to free herself from the Nazi yoke without outside aid.

Veterans First In Sale of Bricks

Brick and tile makers will give preference to builders of dwelling units for veterans in the distribution of their limited production, Ernest Fender, president of the Structural Clay Products Institute, said yesterday.

Because of the serious shortage in many communities, he said, veterans will be unable to obtain homes of any kind unless special provision is made for them. This might mean a temporary delay in other types of building in which masonry construction is specified, he pointed out.

Texans Dance Tonight

The Texas State Society will hold its second "round-up" dance of the season at the Shoreham Hotel tonight from 10 p. m. to 1 a. m. Music will be furnished by E. Bradley Clay's 12-piece all-veteran orchestra.

HOLY HADDOCK! UNCLE SNEEZER HAS GONE AN' WHIFFED OUT TH' FIRE!
PARBLEU! WHAT A SNEEZE!
A-CHOO
AHHH-- THE HAND OF FATE, LAD. SHE MEANT ME TO LIVE AND REAP THE REWARDS OF MY GREAT DISCOVERY!
NOW, YA GOT TA APOLOGIZE TA THIS STRANGE LADY!
YA SEE, HER CAR FOUNDERED AN' SHE CAME LOOKIN' FER HELP.
I DEED NOT MEAN TO CAUSE SO MUCH TROUBLE!
BUT I WEEL TRY TO MAKE AMENDS. AND ZANYA MAKES ZEE VERY NICE AMENDS.
D-D-DON'T COME A STEP CLOSER --- (GASP)

DOTTY

WHEN I WALKED INTO THE BOARD MEETING, I COMMANDED THE ATTENTION OF EVERYONE PRESENT--
EXCUSE ME, DEAR--
AND WHEN I PRESENTED MY PLAN-- RING
--REALLY, PEPPER, I'M A VERY IMPORTANT FIGURE DOWN AT THE OFFICE!
PEPPER

PENNY

SUPERMAN

THIS ROTTEN BUILDING'S FAULTY MATERIALS ALMOST KILLED ME! I'VE HALF A MIND TO COMPLAIN TO THE NEWSPAPERS ABOUT THE ROYAL GYPPING THE TAX-PAYERS ARE GETTING...
SHUT UP, YOU'RE WELL PAID, AREN'T YOU?
HAVING SOME TROUBLE DOWN HERE, BOSS. ONE OF THE MEN ALMOST GOT KILLED-- HE THREATENS TO BLAB ABOUT THE BUILDING'S FAULTY MATERIALS.
GIVE HIM A BONUS AND TELL HIM TO KEEP HIS TRAP SEALED!
SO THE NEW MUNICIPAL BUILDING IS BEING POORLY CONSTRUCTED--SMELLS OF DIRTY POLITICS TO ME--
...AND I'M AN EXPERT AT RENOVATION!

Irr Installed As U. S. Loan League Head

By S. Oliver Goodman

Henry P. Irr of Baltimore, well known in Washington home financing circles, was installed last night as president of the United States Savings and Loan League at the annual convention in Chicago. Mr. Irr succeeded W. M. Brock of Dayton, Ohio.

Clarence E. Kefauver, Washington, was elected a national executive councilman of the league for a two-year term. Mr. Kefauver, executive vice president of Columbia Federal Savings & Loan Association, is past president of the D. C. Building & Loan League.

Walter M. McAllister of San Antonio, Tex., was elected vice president of the league, composed of some 3700 savings and loan institutions including 27 associations in Washington. New directors elected were: District 4, Danbridge Murrell of Lynchburg, Va.; District 1, Ralph Crosby of Providence, R. I.; District 10, Allan C. Andry of New Orleans.

In a talk before the delegates yesterday Mr. Irr said that homebuilders want the assurance "of a certain leasehold on peace" before building houses that will endure.

"Unless we can give some assurance that an atom bomb isn't going to hit that vine-covered cottage or that glass-brick, solar-heated house, we may find ourselves up against some sales resistance to heavy investment in home ownership on the part of a generation which has grave cause to be thoughtful," he declared.

Business Briefs Of D. C. Interest

Thom May Become Chairman

Reports of forthcoming executive changes at American Security & Trust Co. stirred considerable interest yesterday in Washington banking quarters. The bank, whose main office is at 15th and Pennsylvania, is the second largest here with deposits of more than 128 million dollars as of June 30. It has four branches.

Corcoran Thom, who is expected to be succeeded in the presidency by Undersecretary of Treasury Daniel W. Bell, probably will be chosen chairman of the board. The chairmanship has been vacant since the death of Charles J. Bell.

Several other changes are likely to be announced, but officers of the bank were reluctant to talk about them yesterday. Formal announcement is expected to be made after the directors' meeting scheduled for December 18.

175 Hear Connell Here

Clancy D. Connell, president of the National Association of Life Underwriters, addressing a luncheon meeting here in the Mayflower Hotel, declared:

"We in the life insurance business view with alarm the laxity of veterans in maintaining in force their national service life insurance. We have pledged our thousands of field representatives to do all in their power to aid the veterans preserve this protection for their families."

PCA's War Record Cited

Pennsylvania-Central Airlines hauled more than 26,000,000 pounds of military cargo and flew nearly 19,000 military passengers during the wartime operation of its Military Transport Division, it was reported yesterday by C. Bedell Monro, PCA president.

In making public an official report on the airline's military operations, Monro also disclosed that PCA, during a critical 24-month period, had trained more than 1700 pilots, radio operators, navigators and mechanics for the armed forces.

Notes Off the Cuff

Christmas bonuses for employes of Cherner Motor Co., Ford dealer at 1781 Florida ave., will be 50 to 100 per cent larger than last year's, President Joseph Cherner reported yesterday.

Lieut. Col. Wallace M. Burgoyne has returned to Johnston, Lemon & Co. after serving with the Army Air Forces since February, 1942. Colonel Burgoyne has been associated with the Washington investment firm since 1934.

Tom P. Walker, since 1942 president of the Council of Electric Operating Companies with headquarters in Washington, has been elected a vice president of Irving Trust Co., New York.

Ludlow King has been appointed manager of the Washington office of Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. He succeeds C. R. Donovan, who resigned, to establish his own firm as a Washington business consultant.

Hickman Price, jr., former official of the Foreign Economic Administration, has been elected vice president and treasurer and a member of the board of directors of the Kaiser-Frazer Corp.

Earnings Statements

Thompson Products, Inc., reports for nine months to September 30 net profit of $1,406,385, equal to $3.39 a common share, against $2,275,191, or $7.03 a share in the 1944 months.

Timken Roller Bearing Co. reports net income of $4,168,578 for first nine months of 1945, compared with $4,611,926 in the same period a year ago.
